It's a test: David Heater is a polygraph examiner for the Westland Police Department. He administers lie-detector tests in a small room decorated only by a polygraph machine and a chair.

Truth or consequences It's examiner's job to detect liars

BY DARRYL CLEM
STAFF WRITER
dcclem@os.homecomm.net

David Heater is not the man to lie to — and that's the truth.

He's so good at separating liars from truth-tellers that he gets paid to do it.

He can identify liars by the way they breathe, by the thump-thump of their heartbeats, by the way their skin sort of crawls when he asks probing questions.

"Scared? Don't be. Unless, of course, you're hiding a body in the basement, stashing drugs in the attic or gradually embezzling a half-million from corporate coffers.

Heater, 35, is a polygraph examiner for the Westland Police Department. He administers those dreaded lie-detector tests in a small room decorated only by a polygraph machine and a chair.

"Everyone who sits in that chair is nervous, whether they're telling the truth or not," Heater said.

It's his job to tell the difference, and he has remarkably reliable — though not foolproof — ways of doing it.

Polygraph test results aren't generally admissible in criminal courts, but they can be used for certain pretrial motions and civil court cases.

They also can help point a finger at crime suspects and steer investigators away from innocent people. And, at times, they can prompt confessions.

"The polygraph test is a very stressful experience," Heater said.

Intensive training

He received his state polygraph license in October after completing nine weeks of intense training at a private school and after administering 200 tests under the supervision of Michigan State Police Lt. John Wojonarowski in Oak Park.

Heater also had to have a bachelor's degree — his was in journalism.

Injured boy, 5, leaves hospital

■ A boy, who suffered a slashed head, a collapsed lung and lower intestinal injuries in an accident, was released Wednesday.

A 5-year-old Canton Township boy has gone home from a hospital to recover from severe injuries he suffered in a Christmas Eve car accident in Westland.

The boy, who suffered a slashed head, a collapsed lung and lower intestinal injuries, was released Wednesday from Mott Children's Hospital in Ann Arbor, a hospital spokeswoman confirmed.

Westland police Sgt. Peter Brokas had said the boy was improving.

"His condition has been upgraded, and the doctors expect a full recovery," he said.

The boy suffered critical injuries about 3:15 p.m. Dec. 24 when his mother apparently fell asleep while driving north on Hannan at Palmer Road, police officer Jack McIntosh said.

The woman's car ran off the road and hit a traffic sign before hitting a tree. The woman wasn't seriously injured.

The mother has been cited for misdemeanor charges of operating under the influence of liquor/narcotics and child neglect.

The woman had apparently picked up her son from a baby sitter after going to a bar, police said. Neither mother nor son was properly restrained in the car, police said.

Shoppers make new resolutions

BY DIANE GALE ANDREASSI
SPECIAL WRITER

'Twas a few nights before the New Year and your neighbors were out, talking about resolutions to be better people and much less stout.

Resolves from shoppers at Livonia Mall and outside Kmart in Garden City ran the gamut from hopes of better grades to keeping in touch with old friends.

Some were philosophical and planned to improve their character and others had grand ideals of spreading goodwill.

Losing weight tipped the scales as the most common response.

Krystal Fisher of Farmington Hills, Angie Albanna, visiting from San Francisco, and Livonia residents Pauline Grunick and Adeline Riegel said they hoped to shed pounds in 1999. Riegel said she also has her eyes on a casino win.

The experts say that the chances of maintaining an exercise regime after making a New Year's pact, are as slim as winning the jackpot.

No one knows that better than Jason Wooley, a Canton resident and Fitness USA manager with a kiosk in a corri-

Money maker

A Westland man recently won the $250,000 top prize in the Michigan Lottery's "Jingle Bills" instant game.

The winner, who requested anonymity, bought the winning ticket in Lincoln Park.

"I bought the ticket before work and scratched it off when I got there," he said. "When I first looked at it I couldn't believe the amount. It had too many zeros to believe that it was really true. It has been a week since I scratched it off and it still really feels strange to actually be the winner."

The Westland man, an avid golfer, said he has been regularly playing Michigan Lottery instant tickets for the past 10 years.

He plans to use his winnings to pay bills, make car repairs and pay for his children's college tuition.

PLACES & FACES

Help for the needy

Westland firefighters donated Christmas gifts for three homeless families who are using temporary lodging at the Wayne County Homeless Shelter in Westland. This is the eighth consecutive year the firefighters in conjunction with Target, Kohl's and Beaver Creek have assisted local needy families. The firefighters arrived about 10 a.m. Christmas morning at the shelter, which is located in the old Eloise Complex on Michigan Avenue.

Reconstruction begins

American Power Wash Inc. and FDR Investments

have selected a contractor to reconstruct the American Power Wash building which was damaged by fire earlier this year. Builders started demolition on the building's interior recently and expect work will be completed in 6-8 weeks.

Camaro club

Lou LaRiche Chevrolet in Plymouth is the new club sponsor of the Eastern Michigan Camaro Club which is based in Westland.

The 72-member club, established in 1991, is the largest Camaro Club in Michigan.

LaRiche has proposed car events at the dealership and participating in the all-Camaro event, Camaro SuperFest '99.

The club meets 7:30-8:45 p.m. the first and third Monday of each month at Lou LaRiche Chevrolet in the service writeup area.

from Michigan State University. And he had to pass a state written exam and survive an interview process.

He has now given 280 polygraph tests, not only for Westland police but also for authorities from Garden City, Canton Township, Troy, Inkster, West Bloomfield and several other communities.

Few departments have their own polygraph operator, and Westland police Lt. Marc Stobbe, who heads the detective bureau, said Heater's expertise has made a difference.

"It's a very large resource for us," Stobbe said. "It saves us a lot of time and manpower. We can eliminate a lot of suspects by giving them the polygraph. If they pass it, we can move on to other suspects."

Police officers can't force suspects or witnesses to take the polygraph, and half of those who agree to it don't show up for their appointments.

Those brave enough to follow through can expect to spend about two hours with Heater. He starts by talking informally with test-takers, building up their confidence in the polygraph and in his ability to administer it.

"For the nervous truthful person, their only fear is that they will be falsely accused," he said.

But Heater has found that truth-tellers usually relax as the test proceeds, compared to liars

'It's a very large resource for us. It saves us a lot of time and manpower. We can eliminate a lot of suspects by giving them the polygraph. If they pass it, we can move on to other suspects.'

who are betrayed by their involuntary nervous systems when faced with probing yes-or-no questions.

Watching for signs

Liars tell on themselves in several ways while sitting in the polygraph chair.

■ Pneumatic tubes placed around their chests and stomachs measure breathing patterns, which tend to change along with their heartbeats when they are faced with questions they'd rather avoid.

■ A strap placed around one arm reveals blood pressure changes.

■ Monitors connected to two fingertips measure the skin's electrical resistance, which changes when lies are told.

■ A sensor underneath the chair detects body movement. Some suspects try tricks such as placing tacks in their shoes and inflicting personal pain in an attempt to alter their body reactions and confuse the polygraph machine.

"There is no reliable tactic that I'm aware of to consistently beat a polygraph test," Heater said.

As the questioning proceeds, the polygraph machine etches lines on paper charts to measure respiration, heartbeat, blood pressure and the skin's response — allowing Heater to see any patterns.

"We can see the physiological changes," he said. "What we're detecting is the fear of being detected."

Heater conceded that 7 percent to 10 percent of his tests are inconclusive, even though his questions are carefully worded. He worries at times that guilty people may walk free due to confusing results that might halt an investigation.

Still, he said, the vast majority of tests help steer investigators as they try to solve crimes.

Police Sgt. Terry Donohue recalled a confession that Heater marketed from a Westland supermarket employee who had stolen $1,000 while on the job.

"Without Officer Heater and the polygraph, that person would have never confessed," Donohue said. "I had already interviewed her, but she confessed only after she failed the polygraph."

Common crimes

Crimes most commonly resulting in polygraph tests include criminal sexual conduct, larceny and embezzlement.

"Those are the top three, followed by assaults," Heater said.

Six crimes are particularly troubling for polygraph operators like Heater. A suspect and a victim may have different perceptions of what was criminal sex or consensual sex, and both people may appear truthful on the tests.

"The polygraph only tests what a person believes to be true," Heater said.

Lies in cases like murder are easier to detect.

Stobbe praised the job Heater is doing.

"It's essential that a polygraph examiner is someone who is highly intelligent and who possesses a high degree of integrity. We have that in Officer Heater," Stobbe said.

Heater freely admits that polygraph tests aren't perfect, but he said they do help solve crimes.

"It's the best thing that mankind has devised to tell if someone is telling the truth or not," he said.

He seemed like he was telling the truth.

dor of Livonia Mall. He lured passers-by with a display of pictures showing that exercise really does flatten stomachs and build abs.

While losing weight is one of the most common New Year's resolutions, it's also one of the most commonly broken, Wooley said.

"We get a crowd who comes in for three months, they get into shape and look great and then they quit," said Wooley explaining that fitness centers have a 60 percent higher attendance rate between January and April.

Family affair

While some shoppers pined for personal improvement, others hoped to maintain strong family lives.

Livonia resident Bill Relias strolled through the mall with his arm draped over his son, Jeff, an Observer carrier. Rustling Jeff's hair, Relias said his resolution is to be more patient.

Kurt Smith, a Livonia resident who works at Thomas and Thomas Sound Entertainment in Garden City, puts a high premium on family life, too.

"I would try to concentrate a lot more on my health and spend more time with my family," Smith said.

Family relationships were top on Livonia resident Lynn Miller's list. She plans to spend the next 365 days working on "improving communication skills with my spouse. And I'll try to be a lot more patient with my kids."

If the price of cigarettes rises to $5 a pack, Miller said, she will also quit smoking.

Alexander J. Kosido of Plymouth follows the philosophy that the more you give the more you receive.

"I really don't have any (resolutions)," he said. "But, the most important thing to a senior like myself is, I feel, staying busy. I thank the good Lord for good health and that I'm able to stay busy; and for my wife, six children and 13 grandchildren. I'm always giving and it comes back to me 100 fold."

Mary Koehler of Livonia and Hopes for new year: Jennifer Parker, a 14-year-old Westland ninth-grader at John Glenn High School, said she resolves to earn better grades during 1999.

Sarah Artish have similarly high goals. "Both women, who were stopped at different ends of the mall, said exactly the same thing: "I'd like to become a better person."

"I love being with people," Artish said. "I love the public."

Nearby, Mary Therese Aubrey of Rochester, took a break from shopping. Sitting on a bench with three of her five daughters, Aubrey said, she plans to pray more in the new year.

Not for everyone

Some people, like Raene

Kemp of Redford and Tracey Hrubak of Livonia, haven't had time to think about next year, yet. And others, like Ralph Alcalá of Redford and Janet Marshall of Garden City, definitely won't break their resolutions, because they don't make them.

"I never keep them anyway," Marshall added.

And others keep on trying. Like Dan Petersmark, a Macomb Township resident, who has made the same resolution for the last 10 years.

"Quitting smoking is probably my No. 1 problem and my

No. 1 resolution for the 10th year in a row," Petersmark said.

Walking through the mall with a friend, Jennifer Parker, a 14-year-old Westland ninth-grader at John Glenn High School, said she resolves to earn better grades during 1999.

Wayne Chubb, a Redford resident, said he will work on being prompt, because his tardiness is annoying to his friends and family. And Margarine Finney of Taylor hopes to get a new job.

Gene Nelson of Detroit said he hadn't made a resolution yet, but when pressed for an answer he added: "To be more prosperous and to be more sharing and caring to people."

Laura Hall, who moved from Wayne to Boston 16 years ago, said she will go to almost any length to keep in touch with lost friends.

While in town, Hall said, she has knocked on doors hoping to contact people she hasn't talked to in almost two decades. The response, she said, has been great. Most people, who don't have an idea of who she is, invite her into their homes and try to help her search.

City budget chief seeks Livonia job

BY MATT JACEMAN

Livonia City Council members will likely be sifting through stacks of resumes during the holiday break.

Twenty-one people, including the Westland budget director, have applied for the city treasurer's job, and the council plans to meet in committee at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday, Jan. 5, to decide how to narrow the field and pick a successor to Laura Toy.

Toy, who is halfway through her second two-year term as treasurer, was elected to the Michigan House of Representatives in November and took office Friday, Jan. 1.

Council President Jack Engbreton said there was an 11th-hour rush of applicants. Seven people submitted or completed their applications on Tuesday, six on Monday.

The candidates include Gerald "Joe" Taylor, a former city councilman; Elizabeth Duggan, the Westland budget director and the former Livonia deputy treasurer and Councilman Brian Duggan's stepmother; Bill Fried, a community activist and former council candidate; Richard DeVries, a Schoolcraft College trustee and also a former city council candidate; and Patrick Nalley, a Livonia Public Schools Board of Education member.

The council has scheduled a second committee-of-the-whole meeting, at which interviews with the candidates will start, for 7:30 p.m. Monday, Jan. 11, Engbreton said. The committee of the whole meets in the council chambers on the second floor of city hall.

Tuesday, Jan. 12, has been set aside for a second committee meeting, if needed, Engbreton said. The council is expected to officially pick a new treasurer during its first voting meeting of 1999 on Wednesday, Jan. 13.

If the council does not make an appointment within 30 days of the office becoming vacant, Mayor Jack Kirksey would have the power to do so.

Holiday Pounds Erased With Sensible Eating Habits, Exercise.

Livonia Fitness Center Caters To Women With 'Real' Food, Personal Attention, On-Site Exercise.

Holiday excesses mount an annual attack on the waistlines of American women, adding 12 lbs. to the average female figure. Many resort to "quick fix" fad diets-- pills, powders, temporary solutions-- as a means of holding the battle lines during the season of national overindulgence.

But experts say there's no shortcut to maintaining a healthy figure; sensible eating habits and regular physical activity alone will curb the effects of party food & drink that precede the new year.

Enter Inches-A-Weigh, the national fitness and nutrition center for women, recently opened locally in Livonia.

"Our program hinges on the idea that permanent fitness requires 'real' grocery store foods prepared the way our clients like to eat," says Barbara Horowitz, owner of the bustling business.

"Our behavior modification program builds the foundation for a healthy lifestyle our clients can enjoy indefinitely, through sensi-er levels of exertion in each hour-long session." She adds, "What sets us apart is the combination of support, nutritional counseling and our shaping equipment."

Many Inches-A-Weigh clients have had trouble with other programs due to existing medical constraints. "It's great because it works gently enough for women with back problems, diabetes, or even arthritis," says Julie. "What I love most about my job is helping clients achieve goals they thought insurmountable. That happens all the time around here."

Of course, good health requires more than good eating habits. Inches-A-Weigh completes the cycle of good health with a low-impact exercise program. "Our clients get cardiovascular and isometric exercise 3 days a week," says Julie Roach, the Exercise Counselor at Inches-A-Weigh. "We help maintain prop-

A piece of racing history reaches finish

BY MARIE CHESTNEY
STAFF WRITER
mchestney@oc.homecomm.net

It was all over at 6 p.m. Thursday at Ladbroke Detroit Race Course.

By that time, horse-racing diehards had placed their last bets on a race televised from Northville, and tallied their last winnings (or losses) from the 48-year-old Livonia racetrack. Employees had answered their last phone call, swept their last floor and served their last beer. For the last time, ticket-takers had cashed in their last tickets.

By 8 p.m., Michelle Schoen, a horsemen's bookkeeper from Westland, had cleaned out her desk and said her last goodbyes to friends she has made in 25 years spent working at the track.

With the official closing of Ladbroke, the state's only all-thoroughbred track, a piece of Michigan history came to an end.

The last thoroughbred race on the mile-long oval track took place Nov. 8; since then, betting has taken place inside on races televised from tracks around the country.

Ladbroke sold the property for $30 million in March to a group of investors who plan to build a commercial and industrial center on the site at Schoolcraft Road and Middlebelt.

"It's been very difficult this last year," Schoen said. "It's been like going to a funeral every day."

Parts of the building already are missing, sent on to racetracks owned by Ladbroke in California and Pennsylvania, or donated to Michigan organizations.

Chairs in the basement viewing area have been ripped out. Instead of the hum of race fans, the basement now houses tractors, trucks and other field equipment.

Ladbroke's massive 48-star flag, made of wool, has been given to the city of Livonia. Vintage black-and-white photographs have gone on to Greenmead Historical Village. Huge, dusty photograph albums will now be housed at Michigan State University's School of Agriculture. A slew of trophies went to the Michigan Racing Commission.

Saying farewell

With a remnant work crew, the rest of the furnishings — the betting carrels, TV sets, office furniture, dining tables and chairs — will be hauled out in January.

The crew will lock up the building for the last time Jan. 31. At that time, only the out-buildings and the building's shell will be left.

Every day of 1998 since the property sale was first announced has been a "hug" day, said Carol Schroeder, Ladbroke's director of marketing. Employees, horse owners, jockeys and racing fans have all consoled each other over the loss with hugs.

"We've been in this grieving process a long time," Schroeder said. "Two years ago, we had 1,200 employees. Now it's 60. On Jan. 1, it will be next to zero."

Schoen spent her first five years at the racetrack handling bets. Then she took over the horsemen's books and spent the next 20 years keeping the track's accounting straight for both horse owners and jockeys.

Schoen is the person horse owners and jockeys came to when they wanted to get paid. She's the person both groups haggled with if they disagreed over where they placed, or the size of the purse.

Schoen said she never lost an argument.

This year, she paid $14.7 million to the horse owners; $1.4 million to jockeys. The huge computer-printed books now sit on her desk. All 1,000 accounts show the same tally: zero.

Most of the tears were shed after the last live race, outside in the winner's circle, when the tracks fans sang a farewell "Auld Lang Syne."

"Everyone was crying; we were all choked up," Schroeder said.

Desolate scenes

Since Nov. 8, portions of the huge building have become mini-ghost towns where a human foot hardly ever trods.

Horse stalls near the track, numbered one to 10, now stand empty.

Unexpectedly, a TV set runs in the cluttered and unkempt rooms jockeys relaxed in. But nary a jockey is in sight.

Picnic tables where race fans ate, drank and watched the horses round the track are long gone.

The rotunda fountain has been shut off.

The long row of horse stalls that once housed a thousand horses now stand deserted.

Flowers still line the winner's circle, where winning horses strutted in triumph.

But only memories and photographs of the hundreds of horses feted here now remain.

"Every thing you see here today will soon be gone," Schroeder told a visitor. "That's hard to accept. It's the end of an era, an era that made Livonia become a city. Livonia became a city because of the taxes that could be gotten from the track."

Let us help you prepare for a new life.

State grant decision delayed

BY HEATHER NEEDHAM
STAFF WRITER

Schoolcraft College, along with 26 other agencies vying for grants from the Michigan Jobs Commission, will have to wait to learn who will receive $30 million in grant money.

Kathy McMahon, spokeswoman for the Michigan Jobs Commission, said the decision is turning out to be more difficult than expected.

"I think it's just taking a little longer than expected," McMahon said. "Hopefully we'll make a decision by mid-January."

A busy holiday season is partially to blame for the delay, she added.

With agencies such as Schoolcraft College, Focus:HOPE, Oakland, Macomb, Henry Ford and Oakland community colleges and many others competing for $113 million worth of projects, the competition is stiff.

So far the commission has reviewed all 26 of the applications.

"I just think there's some really good proposals out there," McMahon said.

The Michigan Jobs Commission visited Schoolcraft in October. During the visit, Schoolcraft officials received some positive feedback from Michigan Jobs Commission officials, who dubbed the plan a "strong proposal."

Schoolcraft is asking for $6 million to build a 32,000 square foot technology center on the Waterman Campus Center.

The center is designed to be a hub where business, students, faculty and the community can access and apply information technology.

The proposal outlined six major goals for the multi-phase project:

- To increase information technology competencies as applied to local and regional manufacturing operations
- To increase the number of workers with information technology skills in the current and future work force

- To redesign instructional methods in an effort to offer open-entry, open-exit learning

- To create a state-of-the-art facility focusing on certified skill set instruction in information technologies

- To improve the ability of companies and organizations to compete locally, nationally and globally.

- To provide a central location for a variety of community and business services conducive to the economic health of the region.

The jobs commission completed site visits in the fall. Awards were initially expected to be made in December.

The commission expects groundbreaking to occur in spring. Funding for the projects will come from the Michigan Renaissance Fund which collects a portion of Indian gaming money.

Kelley blasts PSC's decision on Edison rate requests

BY TIM RICHARD
trichard@oe.homecomm.net

Frank Kelley's battle against public utilities went down to the wire. In his final days as attorney general, Kelley blistered the state Public Service Commission for a "$76 million gift to Detroit Edison," the largest electric utility.

The PSC ordered Edison's rates reduced by nearly $94 million or 2.8 percent. It also approved Edison's request to accelerate depreciation costs on the Fermi 2 nuclear plant, a change Edison sought because PSC soon will let customers choose electricity suppliers.

PSC chair John Strand said one effect will be to reduce Edison's stranded (unrecoverable) costs $500 million and promote competition.

"Now," said Kelley, "when customers are entitled to rate reductions of $170 million effective Jan. 1, 1999, the commission is cutting rates by only $94 million per year and allowing Detroit Edison to increase its revenues from customers by $76 million per year."

Kelley said his testimony showed Fermi 2 costs were overstated, hence it had less need for accelerated depreciation.

Kelley gave this background: In 1988, Edison made a settlement that permitted it to recover billions from customers for the Fermi 2 plant. Edison was permitted to increase rates for 10 years. After that, Edison's rates were to be reduced by $53 million a year in 1998 and by $170 million in 1999.

But on the first day of 1998, the PSC let Edison recover storm damage costs from 1997. So it reduced rates by $38 million instead of $53 million.

And on the first day of 1999, Edison will reduce rates by just $94 million instead of $170 million.

The PSC's Strand said the latest order requires a $496 million rate reduction in 2008, when the Fermi 2 plant is fully depreciated. In other business, the PSC on Dec. 28:

- Granted licenses to two telephone companies to provide basic local service in Michigan. United States Telecommunications (TelComPlus) and DIECA Communications Inc. of McLean, Va., join more than 60 companies licensed to provide basic local service.

- DIECA's license covers these areas in Ameritech Michigan's zones: Birmingham, Clarkston, Commerce, Farmington, Holly, Lake Orion, Livonia, Northville, Oxford, Plymouth, Rochester, Southfield, South Lyon, Troy, Walled Lake and West Bloomfield, among other communities.

- Approved expansion of MediaOne's license to provide basic local service in: Beverly Hills, Bingham Farms, Birmingham, Bloomfield Township, Bloomfield Hills, Franklin Village and Wayne. MediaOne is headquartered in Plymouth.

AAA offers cold weather emergency tips

Cold air and snowy conditions across the state continue to cause an increase in emergency road service calls, according to AAA Michigan. Motorists are advised to use extra caution when they travel during cold weather.

To help motorists avoid unnecessary delays, AAA Michigan offers the following cold weather car care tips:

- Park your car in the garage. If you have no garage, or if it's full of lawn equipment or another car, put a tarpaulin over the car or put a plastic trash bag between the door (or window glass) and the frame.

- To avoid frozen door or door locks, buy a lubricant that is available in most auto supply stores.

- Heat your key (a pocket lighter works nicely), but remember to wear gloves or hold the key with pliers.

- Use a hair dryer, but make sure the extension cord is one graded for outdoor use and the wall socket is grounded.

- Fill a plastic jug or bag with hot water. Hold it against the door panel or lock area. But don't throw hot water on the car. It, too, will freeze.

- Keep your gas tank at least half full to avoid fuel-line freeze-up.

- Test your battery load strength to determine its cold weather cranking power.

Avoiding 'winter skin'

When Old Man Winter starts blowing, seniors need to pay particular attention to their skin.

"Older skin tends to be thin and dry," said William R. Silverstone, D.O., CMD, medical director of Botsford Continuing Health Care Center. "The lack of humidity in the air further dries the skin, making overexposure to the sun, wind and cold problematic."

"The best defense to protect your skin is to use consistently a skin lotion with a high-lanolin, low-alcohol content," suggested Silverstone. "Your lips also need extra care." Don't forget about the food factor. "Good nutrition helps put skin in a better physiological state to improve its defense mechanism," explained Silverstone. "This includes drinking at least eight glasses of water per day, which rehydrates the skin and helps it create a protective layer of oil."

Bone density-cancer link

Doctors investigating whether bone density is linked to breast cancer risk are seeking females to participate in a research study at the Barbara Ann Karmanos Cancer Institute.

Females ages 40-85 who are newly diagnosed with breast cancer may be eligible to participate in the study. Females from the same age group with no history of breast cancer are also being sought for the study.

Participants will be asked to complete lifestyle questionnaires, have a painless bone density measurement and a small blood sample drawn. "This study is intended to provide doctors with more information about genes that may determine a woman's bone density, and how those genes may play a role in breast cancer," said Karmanos investigator Dorothy Nelson, Ph.D. The national study is sponsored by the U.S. Army's Department of Defense.

Latex allergy

Exposure can create sensitivity in health-care workers

BY KIMBERLY A. MORTSON • STAFF WRITER

kmortson@oe.homecomm.net

A Providence Hospital employee for the past 19 years, Maureen Sage has worked in a variety of departments including labor/delivery, medical surgery and, most recently, the operating room as a Laser Surgery Officer. Over the last two decades she's donned thousands of pairs of exam and sterile gloves due to the nature of her work.

Ironically it's the exposure and contact with natural rubber latex that has virtually forced Sage from the OR and into a position where she has no contact with latex products and subsequently limited patient interaction.

In September 1997, after extensive testing, Sage was diagnosed to be suffering from Latex Allergy (immediate hypersensitivity) — having become sensitized (gradually made allergic) to latex due to long-term exposure.

Compared to other types of reactions, Sage almost instantly experiences sneezing, watery eyes, scratchy throat, shortness of breath and respiratory problems that in some cases could lead to anaphylactic shock.

"I can no longer do the job I went to school for and that's very frustrating," said Sage.

While Sage falls under the "hypersensitive" category, it is estimated some 8-17 percent of health care workers suffer from natural rubber latex sensitization or allergy and 1-6 percent of the general public. David E. Cohen, MD, M.P.H., assistant professor of dermatology, New York University School of Medicine, speaking at the American Academy of Dermatology's Derm Update '98, approximated that more than 5.6 million American health care workers use more than seven billion pairs of gloves each year.

Who's at risk?

Health care workers have a greater chance of sensitization due to the frequency of use and exposure to latex gloves and medical supplies that contain latex. However, persons in the field of dentistry, housekeeping, food service, landscaping, and cosmetology are also at risk. At even greater risk are atopic individuals (those with other allergies or asthma). It is estimated that as many as 25-30 percent of atopic health care workers may become sensitized.

According to Anthony Burton, M.D., medical director of Employee Health - St. Joseph Mercy Health System, individuals who have hypersensitive reactions to latex have systemic antibody formations to proteins in products made from natural rubber latex.

Harvested from the rubber tree, Hevea Brasiliensis, products can contain up to "240 potentially allergenic proteins," according to the American Nurses Association. Latex is tapped from the latex ducts of the tree and sent to processing facilities.

"The allergy is to a protein that naturally occurs in the rubber tree," said Burton. "The cornstarch powder found in the gloves acts as a vehicle for the protein that irritates the wearer via skin contact or inhalation when the gloves are removed and the powder is dispersed into the air."

Increasing incidents

The rising occurrences of latex allergies has been attributed to the 1987 mandate by the Centers for Disease Control to establish "universal precautions" — a set of precautions designed to prevent transmission of human immunodeficiency virus (HIV), hepatitis B virus (HBV), and other bloodborne pathogens when providing first aid or health care.

Coincidentally, the United States Food and Drug Administration, between 1988 and 1992, received more than 1,000 reports of adverse reactions to natural latex rubber.

Burton said the quality of latex gloves produced worldwide varies greatly from manufacturer to manufacturer depending on the degree of processing the product has undergone.

The employee health medical director from St. Joe's described two "major kinds of latex products": dipped and hard rubber latex.

Dipped latex products, such as gloves, are fashioned when the latex sap is poured into porcelain molds. While the gloves remain on the molds they undergo one or more rinses to leach out protein and residual chemicals. The liquid eventually solidifies and the gloves are peeled away.

The quality of the glove, as well as the protein and chemical content is vastly different and thus one brand of gloves could create a dramatically different reaction in an allergic person than another.

Hard rubber latex products are found in things such as erasers, the back of carpeting, and rubber tips from step stools.

Prevention measures

While avoidance is the key to decreasing reactions, that presents a personal and professional challenge for some allergy sufferers, particularly those like Sage. She found herself having to change jobs to avoid contact with the protein.

In the health care field alone there are more than 40,000 regularly used products that contain natural rubber latex including mattresses found on stretchers, adhesive tape, exam/sterile gloves, rubber tourniquets, elastic bandages and medication vial stoppers.

Personal items such as condoms, pacifiers, toys, teething rings, erasers, rubber bands, sports equipment, balloons, goggles, and dishwashing gloves can also produce a wide range of reactions from individuals suffering from the allergy.

Sage's employer, Providence Hospital, introduced a latex allergy questionnaire to all of their employees in a proactive attempt to identify persons who may have the illness or are likely to become latex sensitive. Burton, representing St. Joseph Mercy Health System, added that most hospitals have taken steps similar to St. Joe's, Providence, and Henry Ford by establishing latex allergy committees and various screening opportunities.

"In my opinion hospitals really should be using powder-free gloves," said Burton, who added individuals with the allergy can minimize their exposure by wearing powder-free latex-free gloves.

Most recently the administrative staff of Providence Hospital made the decision to go powder-free, hospital-wide. "It's a good dream hospitals would be able to go latex-free but in reality powder-free will significantly improve the working conditions for many people."

Patients also need to be aware of latex allergy symptoms and precautions

BY KIMBERLY A. MORTSON
STAFF WRITER
kmortson@oe.homecomm.net

Becoming latex sensitive or allergic isn't an isolated problem for the medical profession.

The increasingly common illness is also affecting patients who have had multiple hospitalizations, persons with spina bifida, and individuals with a history of allergies.

A patient may not be aware they are sensitive to latex and experience a reaction upon a visit to their dentist or during a hospital stay. Sensitization can occur after repeated exposure by way of skin-to-skin contact, inhalation, a mucous membrane, wound inoculation, or a parenteral injection (inside the body).

Hospitals such as Providence in Southfield now provide latex-free areas and medical carts containing latex-free supplies.

"We're seeing sometimes two to three patients a week with the allergy," said Maureen Sage, Providence Hospital employee, member of the Associate Latex Committee and a resource for latex issues. "People need to be aware of the symptoms and take the necessary precautions. Exposure is the biggest factor."

Who's allergic, who isn't?

Diagnosing the allergy is the first step in taking precautions against a reaction. Dr. Anthony Burton, medical director of employee health services-Saint Joseph Mercy Health System, says there are currently three methods of testing for the allergy.

■ Blood test. The Food and Drug

Administration approved specific testing for the presence of the latex antibody, of which there are at least six.

Burton warns that the blood test isn't 100 percent accurate as negative results don't always mean the person isn't allergic.

■ Skin prick test. The skin is scratched or pricked with a diluted solution containing latex proteins and positive results can include swelling, itching and redness. The hazard associated with this test is that there is currently no FDA or commercially approved latex extract used in the testing. Therefore the allergist or dermatologist must make their own extract. This can cause varying results depending on the levels of protein found in the latex product used to create the solution.

■ Latex patch. The FDA has approved a latex-patch that is applied to the skin of the potential allergy sufferer and it's worn and monitored over several days.

There are several precautions suggests Sage that can be taken to protect an individual from becoming sensitized to latex proteins. They include:

■ Being tested if you experience symptoms following latex exposure.

■ Avoiding exposure completely if at all possible.

■ If the diagnosis is positive and you are deemed Type I hypersensitive, wear a medical alert bracelet; carry an auto-injectible epinephrine (Epi-Pen®).

■ Use powder-free gloves that are low in latex protein.

■ Wash your hands thoroughly if it is necessary for you to don gloves.

■ Wear the appropriate gloves for your diagnosis and for the task at hand.

■ Alert your dentist, stylist, and physician as well as anyone else who may have contact with you, while they are wearing gloves, to your allergy.

■ Also, health care providers should be prepared to accommodate your needs in the event you suffer from a latex allergy.

"Most people who are positively identified with the allergy should educate themselves and avoid exposure whenever possible," said Burton. "I've seen hundreds of success stories where persons were able to wear the appropriate gloves for their level of sensitivity and return to their working environment."

Mandated guidelines

Following the increase in incidents of latex reactions over the last decade, the FDA, in September 1997, ruled that all medical devices containing latex must be labeled with warnings of possible allergic reactions. The packaging for devices containing natural rubber latex must now be labeled: "Caution: This Product Contains Natural Rubber Latex Which May Cause Allergic Reactions."

The regulations also require the removal of the word "hypoallergenic" from products that contain reduced levels of latex. The FDA ruled this is a misleading claim since even small amounts of latex can trigger allergic reactions.

"This was a big step in identifying the supplies I was working with and exposed to that contained latex as an ingredient. There are literally thousands of products you would never expect to contain the protein that do and this will make identification and the creation of latex-free environments easier," said Sage.

If you suspect you are experiencing symptoms related to latex exposure (dermatitis, hives, congestion, asthma, itching, watery eyes, swelling, etc.) seek medical attention from a physician, allergist or dermatologist who can properly diagnose you. New computer? Follow these tips to save setup time

Judging by all the gushing PR news releases and the exuberant sales figures from the PC industry, this past holiday season was one of the best ever for computers and peripherals.

MIKE WENDLAND

For proof, look at all the red eyes you've been encountering among friends, family and co-workers who have been up till the wee hours trying to get those new Christmas gadgets working. It's like this every year at this time. Despite all the talk about Plug 'n Play, about how easy computers are now supposed to be, they still can be buggers to figure out. Personally, I spent about four frustrating hours Christmas Eve ... until 2 a.m. Christmas morning in fact ... trying to get a new CD-R burner working in my son's computer. Even though I've done it before, even though I'm supposed to know my way around a motherboard, installation and configuration of new devices seldom go as easy as they're described on the outside of the boxes they come in.

So, for all of you who have similarly suffered, let me pass along some PC Mike setup suggestions from someone who's been there. While these six steps won't solve every problem, they will, I believe, help most of us, most of the time.

Step No. 1 - Work no more than 30 minutes at a time. Then, no matter how close you think you are, take a break. Re-think. All the big mistakes usually result from carelessness or desperation. If you haven't solved it in half an hour, get up, walk around, watch some TV, go to bed. Get away from the problem for at least a half an hour. A fresh mind does wonders.

Step No. 2 - Return everything to the original condition. Start over. Unplug. Uninstall. Remove. Then, step by step, slowly reinstall the hardware and software. Read the instructions again, especially the little "Read Me" text files that come on the install disks. Very often, these text files correct problems found after the manual was printed or make things clearer than the printed instructions.

Step No. 3 - Go online to the manufacturer's Web site. This is how I solved my installation problems with my son's CD-R. Every manufacturer now has a website. And almost all have online support areas where you can download new and updated drivers or find FAQs (frequently asked questions) dealing with specific problems and troubleshooting help.

Step No. 4 - Go to Newsgroups. With nearly 30,000 Newsgroups now on the Internet, chances are you'll find one dealing with your device or similar problems. Search through the groups for comments related to your issue. If worst comes to worst, post a question. I've had some answered in as little as five minutes. Newsgroups get results.

Step No. 5 - Post questions on discussion lists or BBS's. I have a Computer BBS on my website (www.pcmike.com). There are always people lurking around ready to help. Again, read through previous posts or use the site's search engine to see if the issue has already been discussed. If not, post your problem and ask for help. Most discussion group regulars love helping out.

Step No. 6 - Call the manufacturer's help desk. expect a busy signal. Expect to be put on hold. For a long time. Help desks are jammed from Christmas through Valentine's Day. When you call in, listen to the recording to see if there's a Fax Back service. If you have a basic installation or configuration problem, there's often a printed tip sheet that can be instantly Faxed to you. Usually, these faxed instructions are easier to understand than the manual.

The six steps above won't solve every problem. But they offer a sound starting point.

If you have Windows 98, be sure and use the "Update" feature found in the Start bar at the lower left part of your screen. This connects automatically to the Microsoft website and alerts you to new fixes, patches and updates that can smooth out your whole operating system.

Microsoft's Web site also offers a very comprehensive online help resource. Go to the main Web site (www.microsoft.com) and look under "Support." You type in your question and a powerful search engine kicks back a list of various articles and suggestions for dealing with it.

And if all the geek-speak gobbledegook has you confused, one of my favorite sites for translating the technobabble is the "whatis" site (www.whatis.com). You'll want to bookmark this site.

A defendant accused of negligence in a civil case will not be held liable until it can be proven that the wrongdoer's conduct was a proximate cause of the plaintiff's damages. The cause of the plaintiff's injuries does not necessarily have to be the direct or immediate result of the wrongdoer's actions, but proximate cause exists when the injury arises as the likely consequence or outcome of the wrongdoer's negligence. Any facts that may lend credence to this cause-and-effect relationship between the wrongdoer's actions and the plaintiff's injuries are weighed and interpreted by the court. It must decide whether the negligent (in) action by the wrongdoer could have foreseeably led to the injuries.

What appears to be the obvious cause of a chain of events, may not stand the test of being found the proximate cause in court. Experienced attorneys understand that a weak link in the chain of events may cause a judge or jury not to find cause.

The poetic genius of Shakespeare

The long lines of ticket buyers at the Birmingham Theatre weren't waiting for the latest high-tech, action-adventure film.

They waited to hear the words of the 16th-century English bard of Stratford whose work they probably studied in high school and college, and whose poetry may have seemed more suited to the ivy-covered walls of academia than the rawness of real life.

OK, OK, maybe they waited to see the plucky Hollywood version of the man whose passion, artistry and inventiveness transcends the ages. (Yes, there are sword fights, bawdy repartee and sex scenes.)

With the star appeal of Gwyneth Paltrow, and an utterly engaging screenplay co-written by playwright Tom Stoppard, "Shakespeare in Love" has accomplished what crusty British literature professors could only imagine.

William Shakespeare has gone mainstream without reducing iambic pentameter to a senseless slogan.

box office with 1.46 billion tickets sold (a 5 percent increase from 1997), "Shakespeare in Love" is an encouraging sign that movie-making can reverse the literary past and enlighten contemporary sensibilities.

The movie is arguably the surprise hit of the year, according to Todd Cochran, general manager at the Birmingham Theatre.

Overflow audiences

"Audiences are more sophisticated and want well-written, well-acted movies," said Cochran, who compares the instant appeal of "Shakespeare in Love" with last year's endearing hit, "Good Will Hunting."

After the initial showings in L.A. and New York drew sold-out crowds, Cochran realized that he'd better make room for overflow audiences. The movie, scheduled to be shown in one of the smaller venues, was moved to one of the larger screens at the downtown Birmingham complex.

Based on unexpectedly high ticket revenue for the film, theaters in Livonia, Westland, Madison Heights and Southfield are most likely making similar adjustments.

Layers and layers

A slow grin spread across Cochran's face as he conceded that more people will learn about Shakespeare through "Shakespeare in Love" than by any college course.

Of course, Hollywood has had other successes when translating Shakespeare to film. Sir Laurence Olivier's "Hamlet," and "Richard III," along with Liz Taylor and Richard Burton in "Taming of the Shrew," and Kenneth Branagh's string of recent films come readily to mind.

But arguably, these films didn't have the lasting power of "Shakespeare in Love," said Cochran. Why? Technology.

With videos and DVDs, the life of a film is being redefined because movies are watched over and over again.

"Accessibility is the key," he said. "Audiences want to laugh, but they also want a good story that stands up

With the touch of a computer screen, Mary Ann Wilkinson demonstrates the impact Salvador Dalí's surrealism had on Alfred Hitchcock's films, in particular the dream sequences in "Spellbound." Wilkinson touches the screen a second time and Dalí's imagery appears in a vintage Porky Pig cartoon.

One of six computer stations installed in the newly renovated Modern and Contemporary Art Galleries at the Detroit Institute of Arts, this interactive program is part of a plan to lure visitors into spending more time studying the work of Warhol, Picasso and Matisse.

"What characterizes the 20th century is that artists started looking at art in a different way," said Wilkinson, who was named curator of 20th century art in the midst of renovations in August 1997. "It was during the surrealist period, film was beginning to be used as a medium by artists. Looking at Hitchcock's 'Spellbound' and a Porky Pig cartoon, you really see the impact of Surrealism on artists and culture in America."

Walking through the 20th century galleries, visitors begin to learn there is more than one way to look at art, Wilkinson and education director Nancy Jones planned the galleries with that concept in mind. Both were instrumental in bringing about changes in interpretive labels and instituting computer stations and a hand-held audio tour in the 22,000-square-foot space. The changes didn't come about by accident or a curator's whim. Even before the first brush of paint transformed the 20th century galleries into a well-lit space for viewing the works of Christo, Georgia O'Keefe and Robert Rauschenberg, the museum polled the public for ideas on how to make the galleries user friendly.

Renovations

"It's been an exciting process," said Wilkinson. "We did a visitor's evaluation before and during renovations because we were committed to making this space something people would like to use. So many people are intimidated by modern art because it's so hard to look at. It makes you think, 'Just as it has done for centuries, people want art to tell a story. So many people are afraid that they won't understand.'"

Unlike special exhibition audio tours, INFORM, a hand held audio tour, tells visitors about the artist and work of their choosing after entering the number located near a symbol on the work's descriptive label.

"Some people don't want to read, some people only want to listen," said Wilkinson. "People learn in a variety of ways. As far as for INFORM, this is the first try to have a hand held audio tour for the permanent collection. In the next several months, we hope to add the rest of the museum."

"It's a very experimental," added Jones. "Most museums don't do what we've done. Most audio tours are like listening to an art history lecture. We want to let people know there is more than one way to look at a work of art. On the audio tapes, I give my interpretation, Mary Ann gives her's and then there's a formal analysis."

For visitors who want to go beyond what they see and experience in the galleries, there's an education room stocked with books, tables and chairs, and a computer station. A casual area in the corner of one gallery is for anyone who wishes to read or just sit and contemplate the works of Oldenburg and Warhol.

Working together

"It was a very collaborative effort," said Jones. "We wanted to create the kind of an environment that's inviting. We want to give insight into what visitors are looking at and to provide opportunities for them to explore the art. There's more and more research being done on the art experience to make it more exciting, more engaging. We know people like inter-activity, to have the works of art communicate to them."

'On a Good Day' author wrings humor from the mundane

At times, Gay Rubín admits she wonders if she's crossed the line into her own fictitious literary universe, a place populated by the type of eccentric characters straight from an Anne Tyler or John Irving novel.

For a disciplined writer like Rubín, who explained her need to write is a practice on the level of religious worship, there's a renewed urgency.

"Right now, I feel more compelled than ever about my work," said Rubín of Birmingham. "I want to have an eye-to-eye, heart-to-heart relationship with my readers." After decades as a "secret writer" — known as a fiction writer only by a few friends — Rubín has emerged in the last several years as a talented, often-published short-story writer who blends taut, well-crafted plots with rapid-fire prose.

Rubín's latest collection of short stories, "On a Good Day," reflects the playful, stream-of-consciousness swirling narrative breeze that also makes her a charming conversationalist.

In January, she'll begin a book-signing tour that will include appearances at Borders Books in Rochester Hills and Dearborn, and visits to book stores in Boca Raton, Boynton Beach, Fla., and Los Angeles.

Pursuit of story

From an unlikely cigar-chomping contributing writer to "Cigar Lifestyles" who wanted to be a singer — but couldn't sing — to a mother of two grown daughters, Rubín's perspective draws on "those special moments" when you can feel the magic of life, she said.

"I want to answer questions that people have about life."

And that, for Rubín, means wringing humor from the mundane. For instance, a clerk at one of Rubín's

The 20th century galleries are much like a work of art in progress. The education department is creating more interpretive labels, but also developing new tools for interpreting art. Currently in the works is a curiosity cabinet for the pop art galleries. The hands-on activity will help viewers experience a variety of pop art. Brochures are also being written that concentrate on a single piece of art.

"Mary Ann was excited about this being a laboratory," said Jones. "We learn so much from what we've done. I haven't seen anything like this in other museums. It's very special."

Disassembled 18 months ago to make way for the "Splendors of Ancient Egypt" exhibition, the modern and contemporary art galleries lead viewers through a gamut of styles from Abstract Expressionism to Picasso and Cubism, Matisse and the School of Paris, Minimalism, and Abstraction after 1950. Among the newer works is Martin Puryear's wire mesh and tar sculpture. The 1997 work, acquired two months ago, is at once delicate and sturdy.

"We never had the opportunity to take everything out and put everything in again," said Wilkinson. "We wanted to make the collection understandable and approachable. We realized early on that we couldn't do it chronologically so we've grouped art works in clusters. The hard part to doing this was not putting out everything I wanted to."

Visitors will find Kandinsky's work incorporated with art by Adolph Gottlieb and Detroit artist Ed Fraga. More than ever, Michigan-made art can be seen in the galleries. Ellen Phelan, Ann Mikolowski and Brenda Goodman are a few of the locals being shown. Tyree Guyton's "Caged Brain" from 1990 is created from rope, a bird cage and other found objects. The last contemporary art gallery deals with narrative painting. Here, visitors are treated to works by Mike Kelley, who grew up in Michigan and now lives in California, and Peter Williams, an instructor at Wayne State University.

"It's a good way to learn about artists in the state," said Wilkinson. "This gallery will change often so people will understand how deep our collection is. The contemporary gallery shows the return to figurative painting that happened in the late 1980s. A video kiosk will eventually feature performing artists. That's why people have to keep coming back."

Passion for Glass

The exhibition, "A Passion for Glass: The Aviva and Jack A.

Robinson Studio Glass Collection," is one of the highlights of the 20th century galleries. It continues through Sunday, Feb. 14 in the large scale, well-lit showcases. William Morris, Dale Chihuly and Ginny Ruffner are among the contemporary studio glass artists in the collection, the Robinsons donated to the museum in 1996.

"The Robinsons gave a donation to transform the gallery into a space where you can display decorative arts," said Wilkinson. "We've never had that before. Decorative arts will end up in this gallery once the Robinsons glass collection exhibit closes."

Wilkinson plans to rotate work in the 20th century galleries in six months. Warhol portraits on loan to the Kalamazoo Museum will be displayed upon their return. A special project space will host installations, art and video such as Bill Viola's "Nine Attempts to Achieve Immortality" created in 1996.

"It's more of a work in progress," said Wilkinson. "Seeing where it works, what doesn't work. Now that galleries have been reinstalled we can go back and fine tune. We can start thinking about acquisitions and bringing in exhibits such as Ben Shahn in July."

favorite bookstores told her about how he once set out to "live on the street, but found it so hard that he had to get a job."

That line set Rubín in pursuit of a story. She invited the store clerk to lunch.

As a result of conversations with the clerk, Rubín penned "Howie the Bum," one of the short stories in her recent collection.

But the road from epiphany to finished story, for Rubín, can hardly be called facile.

"Writing is about heart, and knowing storytelling as a craft is how you get to heart," she said. It's a tireless process.

Rubín rewrites endlessly, then cuts, cuts, cuts until all that remains is the essential spine of the story.

In between, however, it's not unusual for her to put aside a story. A 100-page story sat in a drawer for a decade before Rubín said she resurrected it because "I finally knew what it's about."

And an expansive draft of a novel - which measures in pages about three-feet high - is all finished, according to Rubín; except, of course, it just needs new words, she said.

As her finest short stories demonstrate, understatement is Rubín's finest literary tool.

A sense of play

A regular lecturer at local writing conferences, Rubín also teaches creative writing at the University of Michigan, where she earned a master's in fine arts.

In the spring of 1997, Rubín translated her love of books into a cable show, "Writers' Roundtable," which aired in the Birmingham-Bloomfield area. The show, which ran for four months, featured discussions with writers, including Charles Baxter and Judith Guest.

For a gregarious person who is relegated to the sedentary writer's life, Rubín sees the irony as a lesson for her own life and for her readers.

"I want people to see ironies and paradoxes in my stories that teach them something about life," she said. "But I want to write about serious things in a way that's playful."

True to her credo, Rubín already has a working title for her next collection of stories. She refers to her new work as "How to be a bitch."

"It's autobiographical," she laughed. "I used to be a nice person. There's already one story, it's called 'How to out-bitch the bitches.'"

Of course, Rubín laughs. Then, she wonders whether she should have said what she did. When she's told that it's a "provocative title," she's apparently convinced to stick with her quote.

But before Rubín continued to work on her next collection of stories, she'll travel to promote her new book, and meet many of the readers who she keeps in mind as she writes.

While it may all seem like play, there's no mistaking Rubín's sense of urgency.

"Let me know what you think of my book," she said. Then, she quickly adds: "Only tell me if you love it. If you don't, I'm unavailable."

Don't believe it. Rubín is just past the pages in her book. Readers will find her eye-to-eye. Heart-to-heart.

over time." And there's plenty of layers in "Shakespeare in Love."

Shakespeare's shadows

Taking liberties with history and Shakespearean scholarship, the movie offers an inventive story behind the story of Shakespeare's great romantic tragedy "Romeo and Juliet."

While there are many references to other plays in Shakespeare's body of work, and an impressive range of acting talent, the truly remarkable feature of the film is Shakespeare's mastery of language and ability to transfer passion into stunning descriptive phrases.

In the age of tabloids, sitcoms and pulp fiction triteness, few writers can even pass through Shakespeare's long shadow.

Of course, Shakespeare lived amid a time when words were akin to the realism of photography and the magic of film.

Hopefully, "Shakespeare in Love" will be a bridge for readers to explore the playwright's larger body of work, including "Hamlet," "Othello," "The Tempest," "A Midsummer Night's Dream," "Twelfth Night," "Henry V," and "Julius Caesar."

After all, in our age of terminal reruns, perhaps rereading and rewatching Shakespeare's works is the best we can hope for.

Judy Collins shares lessons from a hard life in memoir

Singing Lessons: A Memoir of Love, Loss, Hope, and Healing
By Judy Collins
(Pocket Books, $25)

By KEELY WYGONIK
STAFF WRITER
kwygonik@e.homecomm.net

Singing is as natural to Judy Collins as breathing. She's been singing for as long as she can remember - for the joy of it, to put food on the table and to heal emotional wounds. The most painful of all being the suicide of her only child, a son, Clark, age 33, in January 1992.

In her journal, Collins' younger sister Holly wrote - "Suicide is a permanent solution to a temporary problem." For survivors, the weight of wondering if there was something you could have done to stop the suicide, can be unbearable.

There were times after Clark's suicide when Collins herself wanted to die. She wrote instead, to remember her son, to help her survive. There are few guidebooks for survivors. Collins began "Singing Lessons: A Memoir of Love, Loss, Hope and Healing," thinking that it would be a book about suicide. Instead, it turned out to be a tender, very personal story, about Collins, her life, and battles with depression and alcohol, and struggle to go on living after Clark died.

"As I wrote," said Collins, "I realized that Clark's story was about memory, but it was also about the lessons I had learned: lessons of work, of survival, of loss, of love; lessons of singing through the storm."

Blessed with good teachers who helped her become the legend she is, Collins generously shares those lessons in her memoir. Her book is part autobiographical, part confession, part instruction. Each of the 14 chapters begins with a personal prayer.

She is forgiving as she pieces together painful memories such as her father's depression and alcoholism, demons, which later haunted her. For Collins, the pieces, once scattered, have come together, and she's found the solution to what was once a painful puzzle.

Clark, also suffered from depression, and began using drugs when he was 9 or 10.

In her search for peace, Collins learned that "suicide tendencies are not inherited, but tendencies toward depression are." There was alcoholism in both her mother's and father's family. As she was finishing her memoir, a nephew died from an overdose.

"Singing Lessons" is about loss, but it's also about joy. Collins is a remarkable woman who has led an interesting life. She met President Kennedy and became friends with President Clinton and his family.

Her father, Charles Collins, lost his sight at the age of 4, yet put himself through college, learned to play piano, and supported his family as a radio announcer. Despite his blindness, Charles was fiercely independent. He and Judy's mother, Marjorie, instilled in their five children a strong work ethic, and belief in God. Growing up, Collins battled polio. As a young adult she fought tuberculosis.

Married after she learned she was pregnant, shortly before her 19th birthday, Collins supported her son and husband, Peter, a graduate student, by singing in clubs during the folk movement's formative years in the 1960s. She was a career woman during a time when most women stayed home with their children.

During the 1960s, Collins was making history, sharing the stage with people who would become American folk legends including Bob Dylan, Peter Yarrow and Pete Seeger. She recorded songs by Leonard Cohen and Joni Mitchell before mainstream America knew who they were. Collins sang at anti-war rallies, fund-raisers for the freedom workers in Mississippi, and benefits for women's rights. She remains active in politics and social causes and recently received an award by Peace Action for her work with UNICEF.

She knows the pain of being a single mother, and losing custody of a child, which she did after divorcing Peter. Later, Peter, who remarried the day after their divorce became final, returned Clark, then 9, to his mother because he was a handful.

Always there was the music, and it has comforted Collins throughout the years. No matter how bleak things were, she never lost faith, or belief in the power of love. In 1978 she met Louis, whom she married in 1996.

Her lessons are inspiring, especially at the start of a new year when many people vow to change their lives - "Even the darkest day has its sunlight."

As an added bonus, the book includes a CD with four songs written by Collins - "Singing Lessons," "Born to the Breed," "The Fallow Way," and "The Wedding Song (for Louis)."

The past echoes through new abduction mystery

Four Corners of Night
By Craig Holden
(Delacorte, $23.95)

VICTORIA DIAZ

another graveyard shift in the decaying Midwestern city they call home.

Suddenly, a call comes in over their radio. In one of the more dilapidated parts of town, a child has come up missing and is feared abducted.

The call, in a sense, appears to freeze the two experienced law men momentarily. Soon, we see why.

Seven years earlier, Arbaugh's daughter, disappeared and, despite a massive manhunt, was never found. Now this high-priority radio call seems a chilling echo from the shared past of these two childhood friends.

Thus begins the third novel by Dexter, Mich., writer Craig Holden ("The River Sorrow," "The Last Sanctuary"). In it, he proves, once again, that he can reach out and grab a reader's attention from the get-go. In that initial scene, we can smell the bacon and coffee, hear the intrusive crackle of the police radio, and we can feel the tension between these two off-duty cops. One wants to evade the "flow and garbage and pain" and one cannot turn his back on it.

The former gives way to the latter, and we find ourselves along for the riveting, you-are-there ride as the two partners prowling the ragged streets, trying to unravel the mystery of this latest disappearance. Eventually they find startling connections between the two cases.

The tale is told from the viewpoint of Mack Steiner, who describes himself as "an agnostic Jewish-Lutheran" whose "interest in finding a solution comes from the ... knowledge of what this ... girl must be going through and, to be honest, from the sheer intrigue."

He does not, he insists, possess the amount of empathy his highly-emotional partner does. "What has always been surprising about him ... is the depth to which he feels for these victims," he tells us.

In eloquent prose that shows up too rarely in suspense fiction, and with a kind of singularity of voice, Holden not only paints his two main characters in living color but does the same with a host of supporting players.

From Steiner's troubled adolescent daughter, who seems on the verge of disappearing herself, to Arbaugh's nasty foster mother, to the grubby prostitutes on the street corners of this crippled city, to the crackheads in the ragged buildings, all (no matter how brief their appearance in this drama) seem real enough to touch.

Figuring very large here is the city itself. Never named, which makes it even more haunting, it lies somewhere beneath a "soaked-in Ohio sky," Rusty, shattered, stained, moldering, it provides a rich and memorable backdrop for Holden smartly-paced story.

Other pluses: "Four Corners of the Night," through written in clearly-accessible style, contains enough twists and curlicues to satisfy the most sophisticated thriller fan. Even when you think everything has been revealed, you still find another facet of the story, one more surprise around the next hairpin curve.

Some of the final surprises may seem a little far-fetched, however.

Also, readers who like to delve into details of police work will find much of that on these pages, although the details are never allowed to get in the way of the story. "I spent time going on calls with two Toledo detectives," Holden has said, in explaining some of the research for the book.

"A day shift investigator ... showed me the general layout and operating procedure of the detectives' bureau and took me on some routine calls. I spent nights riding with a graveyard shift loner ... responding to calls ranging from assaults and abductions and car thefts to rapes and robberies and drug busts."

Some readers may grow impatient with Holden's not-always-linear narrative. The story is structured so that we are often taken subtly back-and-forth in time between the earlier disappearance and the later one. As a result, you may find yourself thinking you are reading about one, when in fact, you are reading about the other.

It pays to pay close attention, and keep in mind that this is, first, foremost, and always, a story about echoes.

FOCUS ON WINE

RAY & ELEANOR HEALD

There's liquid gold in them thar hills!

Looking for gold in the 1850s, fortune seekers headed to California's Sierra Foothills. By 1856, money gushed and lifestyle demands for the best food and drink gold could buy reached a pinnacle. The rush to plant grape vines nearly equaled the rush to discover gold.

By the mid-1860s, a full-fledged pioneer wine industry had been created in the redlands and granite spils of the Mother Lode Country. Back then, more wineries operated there than in the rest of California.

Boom times ended when mines ran dry, late in the 19th century. This downturn was followed by the first phylloxera outbreak, devastating most vineyards. Wineries that survived had their backs broken by Prohibition. But that's the past. The present is bright and the future exciting.

Ironstone Vineyards

The word bargain is no longer associated with wines from California's north coast counties of Napa and Sonoma. But it is alive in former Gold Rush country such as Calaveras County. A bevy of more popularly priced wines are the discovery from today's Gold Rush hills.

Visitors to the region take a step back in time into mining towns such as Murphy's, where you find Ironstone Vineyards and a wine Mother Lode.

Ironstone bills itself as "unique in all the world." We asked Stephen Kautz, Ironstone's president to explain this. As starters, he cited 100 percent family ownership; California family vegetable farming dating back to 1923; and grape growing since 1968. Vineyards planted to chardonnay, cabernet sauvignon, sauvignon blanc and zinfandel were farsighted for their time. Today, Ironstone farms about 6,000 acres of grapes.

At first, grapes were sold to other wineries. In 1982, Ironstone had its first vintage, but a major turning point in quality and recognition came in 1988 when the Kautz family hired talented winemaker Steve Miller and gave him a state-of-the-art facility that included underground caves.

So proud of its wines and facility, the Kautz family made their location a destination winery and entertainment center, with an in-house bakery, a cooking school, banquet center for 1,500 and one of the top 10 winery gardens in the United States. An amphitheater under construction will be completed in Spring 1999. Indeed, there's more than wine at Ironstone!

OATMEAL

START YOUR DAY WITH A WARM TUMMY

By MELANIE POLK
SPECIAL WRITER

If cold, dark winter mornings aren't enough reason to seek the comfort of a steaming bowl of oatmeal, then consider that January is National Oatmeal Month — a worthy observance for a food that's both wholesome and extremely popular.

A single cup of oatmeal provides four grams of total dietary fiber, including two grams of cholesterol-lowering soluble fiber. The grain is also an excellent source of such nutrients as thiamin and magnesium.

There are several basic types of oatmeal, which differ in cooking time and texture rather than taste and nutrition. Steel-cut (also called Scotch or Irish) oats are oat groats (oat grains without their hulls) that have a coarse, chewy texture and take up to 20 minutes to cook; rolled oats, which are groats that are steamed and flattened between steel rollers, cook more quickly; quick oats are cut into small pieces before rolling and cook in only a minute; and instant oats are precooked and pressed, so they need only boiling water to reconstitute them. Oats should be stored in a dark, dry spot in a well-sealed container. If humidity is a concern, refrigerate oats for up to a year.

For breakfast, it's hard to beat a bowl of oatmeal, especially when combined with fruit. Cook some up with grated apple and cinnamon, or serve it with sliced banana.

Beyond breakfast, oats are a great addition to dishes like meatloaf, stew or soup for adding substance and thickening. Use oats as a coating for oven-fried chicken breasts or fish. Seasoned oats make a super stuffing for vegetables, and they also make a good coating for pan-roasted potatoes, carrots and other vegetables.

Oats are the basis for a variety of sturdy breads, biscuits and cakes, and oatmeal cookies are a delicious way to get extra fiber in your diet. Use oats in fruit crumbles, low-fat pie crusts and brownies as well.

QUAKER OATS

Dessert for breakfast: Like the bread it's named after, Banana Bread Oatmeal features fragrant cinnamon and nutmeg, sweet ripe bananas and crunchy pecans. Use quick oats for a creamier texture; old-fashioned oats for a heartier taste and texture.

FUN FACTS

- January is Oatmeal month because we buy more oatmeal in January than during any other month of the year. In January 1998, we bought 36 million pounds of oats — enough to make 360 million bowls of oatmeal.
- Adults 65 years of age and over eat the most oatmeal — an average 79 bowls a year. Kids 12 and under eat, on average, 50 bowls per year and are the biggest consumers of flavored instant oatmeal.
- Of those people who eat instant oatmeal, 55 percent combine the oats and liquid and cook it in the microwave.

- While 86 percent of all oatmeal is eaten at breakfast, 6 percent of oatmeal is eaten at dinner.
- We add something to plain oatmeal 92 percent of the time. The top five favorite oatmeal toppings, in order, are: milk; sugar; margarine/spreads/butter; fruit, mostly raisins and bananas; and syrup/honey.
- Among the more unusual oatmeal toppings cited by National Eating Trends are: sesame seeds; coconut; pistachios; sunflower seeds; whipped cream and whipped topping; and cottage cheese.

Pick weight-loss and health goals that are right for you

SENSIBLE LIVING

BEVERLY PRICE

As you enter January of the new year, what are you thinking about when it comes to your health? Although you may establish weight loss and health goals for the new year, will you follow them through?

There are so many weight loss programs out there beckoning you to sign up. They sound tempting when you're tempted. "20 pounds of weight loss in one month." However, will they help you change your eating habits?

Most weight loss programs not only fail to address the emotional issues behind why you may be overeating, but they also have very little to offer in the way of nutrition education. How do you evaluate the "best" weight loss program for you? Let's explore some of the advice that the experts have to offer.

In the book and audio tape, "Thin for Life," by Anne Fletcher, she describes characteristics of individuals who kept their weight off for three or more years. Most of the individuals she surveyed had lost and gained back their weight several times, and had been overweight since childhood. After years of struggling, they found an approach that was right for them.

"Just because something worked for a celebrity does not mean it is right for you," writes Fletcher. They may have gone through a program or met with a dietitian, but ultimately, the "plan" was their "plan." It was not just a "menu to follow."

Why diets don't work

This is why so many "diets" don't work. They simply provide a safety net so you don't have to make any effort. The diet does the work for you, so you do not have to think at all. But when the diet is over, you are left wondering, "Now how do I maintain my new weight on my own?" As Dr. Stephen Gullo says in his eye-opening audio tape, "Thin Tastes Better," "If you don't solve your emotional problems as well as deal with your food cravings while you are 'dieting,' they will still be there when you lose your weight." He goes on to explain that eventually, you will gain back the weight you have lost if you did not deal with your food issues during the weight loss process.

Canadian best seller, "You Count, Calories Don't," by Linda Omichinski, founder and president of HUGS International, Inc. developed an empowerment approach to health which is embraced by defeated dieters.

- Forget the scale, calorie counting and fat gram levels
 - Learn how to tune into your body for signals that mean enough & more
 - Discover individual patterns for food and activity levels that maintain personal energy
 - Find the strength to accept yourself just as you are and get on with life
- One of my clients, Sharon Sweet, who successfully achieved her weight loss goal said, "This is not my only goal. Now that I achieved one goal, I need to work toward my next nutrition goal."

You never get to a final place. You are always perfecting and exploring new avenues when it comes to your health. So, when evaluating a personal weight loss program for 1999, whether it is a group or one-on-one guidance from a health professional, make sure that your potential program meets your individual needs. If you do not see progress in terms of behavior change within six weeks, don't be afraid to enlist the help of a mental health professional in order to help you get to the root of your eating behavior. Happy New Year.

The 1997 Ironstone Chardonnay is brimming with tropical-fruit flavors and a fruit-driven finish, with a light touch of oak. Its a wine that says, "Pull the cork and enjoy me today."

Ironstone Merlot from the 1996 vintage is blended with cabernet sauvignon for structure. Red fruits dominate with olive complexities in the background and a mellow palate impression. Bright cherry and juicy blackberry fruit are the hallmarks of the fruit driven 1996 Ironstone Cabernet Sauvignon.

There aren't many varietal cabernet francs on the market and those that are, are often mucked up with too much oak. The 1996 Ironstone Cabernet Franc sings blueberries and bright red fruits finishing with spicy peppery notes.

Ironstone 1995 Shiraz is yummy and jammy with smoky bacon accents that make you think of a Rhone wine from France. Ironstone was the first California winery to release a varietal Shiraz in 1992.

The 1997 Ironstone Obsession is an off-dry white wine, made from the symphony grape, a hybrid developed in the U.S. and produced from a cross between muscat of Alexandria and grenache gris. Refreshing and crisp, it makes a great match with Asian, Thai or spicy Cajun foods.

Wine Seminar

To repeat, all Ironstone wines are incredible values for just under $10. We're conducting "Seeing Red" an all red wine seminar 7:30-9:30 p.m. Mondays Jan. 25, and Feb. 1, 8 and 15, at the

Townsend Hotel in Birmingham, $120 per person for the series. Topics includes red wines from the Rhone Valley, Australia, Italy and Bordeaux. Phone (248) 644-3443. TOOTH DECAY

It is important to distinguish between "caries," the Latin word for "decay," and a "cavity," the hole that occurs if the caries has destroyed the tooth enamel and penetrates the tooth's dentin. Caries may first appear as a white or brown spot on tooth enamel. It is an indication that bacterial acids have begun to dissolve calcium and phosphate in the tooth enamel (demineralization). If it is detected early enough, it is possible to remineralize the enamel and stop decay by cleaning the teeth thoroughly, applying topical fluorides, and removing plaque. Otherwise, once a cavity forms, remineralization cannot fill it up. Left untreated, a cavity will continue to grow until it destroys the entire crown of the tooth.

Make your own granola

AP - Homemade granola is an appealing form of cereal food. It's simple to make, too, since most of us keep the oatmeal and other key ingredients on hand.

Gingersnap Granola, an uncommon variation on the theme, pairs traditional quick or old-fashioned oats with contemporary oat bran.

Lightly sweetened and full of crunch, it owes its gingersnap-like flavor to molasses, lemon peel and spices. A 3/4-cup serving of this low-fat recipe contains 4 grams of dietary fiber, 230 calories and only 19 percent calories from fat.

Stored airtight, Gingersnap Granola will keep several weeks at room temperature. For a treat, top with low-fat yogurt and fresh berries.

GINGERSNAP GRANOLA

- 3 cups oat bran
- 2 cups oats (quick or old-fashioned, uncooked)
- 2 tablespoons margarine

Legacy of the Hohokam seen everywhere in Arizona

BY THERESE L. MCFARLAND
SPECIAL WRITER

I cruised south out of Phoenix on U.S. 10 toward Tucson. It was straight and flat and brown and dry. My delight at seeing the sun in the winter was slightly offset by the lack-luster scenery dotting the highway.

Whenever I'm on vacation my sense of direction and map reading rallies. Perhaps by some divine intervention, I can find obscure places with minimal of no signs. Back in the Detroit-metro area, I have to really concentrate to find downriver.

What seemed like only minutes later, I was already 40 miles south of Phoenix and wandering a course through desert land to the Casa Grande Ruins National Monument in Coolidge, Ariz.

Weathered, tawny monoliths of the prehistoric Hohokam Indians glowed with majestic reverence against the cowgirl blue sky. Named by the Spanish explorers, Casa Grande means "the Great House." This incredible technological feat used a mud mixture of sand, clay and limestone applied on top of a wooden frame, in courses that were as thick as four feet near the base. Casa Grande, deemed the largest existing Hohokam ruin structure, is a splendid example of their final architectural style; their Classic Period (1100 to 1450 AD).

This was my introduction to the Hohokam, a mysterious ancient people who left behind evidence of an advanced civilization and technology, similar to the more popular Anasazi culture to the north. Strolling the compound ruins and the Great House aroused heart and mind questions about these highly evolved people who date back to 300 AD, according to archeologists. Some believe that the Great Halls, like the Great House at Casa Grande, were astronomical observatories. The people gathered in these reflective arenas to examine their world through strategic openings in the walls and also to give thanks.

For a small fee, the visitors center offered exhibits and artifacts reflecting the Hohokam lifestyle, a desert farming community with well-developed canal and irrigation systems. They were also keen hunter-gatherers, traders and artisans. Unique to the Hohokam were the traditional, decorative red-pigment paste on buff pottery.

In the late 1600s, missionaries visiting this site found the Pima Indians living in brush huts nearby the ruins. The Pima claimed their ancestors were the "ho-ho-KAHM," which translates into "all used up." The disappearance of the Hohokam remains a mystery today.

Traveling south on U.S. 10, I exited toward the Tucson Mountain district - or Saguaro

National Park. Remote signs, rugged terrain and saguaro desert giants beckoned. Native to southern Arizona, the saguaro cactus can grow up to 50 feet tall, live for 150 to 200 years and weigh up to eight tons. I had just enough time to drive the nine-mile dirt road known as the Bajada Loop that winds through majestic saguaro, barrel cactus, teddybear cholla, prickly pear cactus and mesquite trees.

I parked my rented brilliant orange Mustang near a scenic path at the base of a small desert mountain that led up to preserved petroglyphs. I was delighted by the prospect of these ancient drawings. Then my mind conjured some crazy people lurking at the mountain's top, waiting to knock me out and rob me, or worse. I realized the horrid influence of TV and started down the path. However, still a city girl, I kept the pepper spray in my vest pocket. Emphatic signs to stay on the trail prompted my search for desert wildlife, like roadrunners and gila monsters and the western diamond-back rattlesnake. All I spied were a few cactus wrens making holes in spiny cholla cactus.

The handiwork of the Hohokam, the petroglyphs were spectacularly arranged at the small mountain's crest, as if an open-air chapel. I couldn't interpret their designs, but it felt like a happy and thankful story. In silent unison with an elderly gentleman and his companion, we stood in awe.

I exited the park and witnessed striking pink blue magenta rays piercing gauzy clouds layering a limitless sky. Caught up in the beauty, I nearly crashed that brilliant orange Mustang. My destination was north to Scottsdale.

The following day I traveled east out of Scottsdale toward the quaint, historic town of Globe, a charming example of the Golden Age of Mining (1870-1920), not to mention the home of the oldest Woolworth store of the west. I visited the local ruin of Besh-Ba-Gowah Archaeological Park, attributed to the Salado Indians who also unexplainably disappeared around 1450 AD.

The Salado are well known for their incredible and highly decorative utilitarian pottery. I lurked through rooms (some reconstructed) and climbed the two-floor structures of the prehistoric Indian settlement. Near the compound's edge stood an enigmatic sunken chamber. Similar to the kivas of the ancient Anasazi, it was a room dug deep in a pit with an altar against the wall and a small hole to allow the spirits smoke to enter and leave. I envisioned their sacred ceremonies. Prior to the Salado (between 900 and 1100 AD), evidence suggests that the Hohokam inhabited these same grounds in their pit houses.

My plans to continue about an hour and a half farther east to the Kinishaba ruins located on the Fort Apache Indian Reservation were thwarted. It was simply too late. I returned to Scottsdale.

Time limitations forced choices. The next morning I headed north toward Sedona but detoured to visit what is perhaps one of the best preserved structures in the Southwest, Montezuma's Castle. Ochre cliff mountain dwellings fronting an azure sky, this magnificent accomplishment by the Sinagua Indians dated back to 1125 AD. I found myself wondering about their daily lives in these cliff-side dwellings. Never mind the obvious questions of hauling all their provisions up those steep walls, how did they keep their toddlers from walking off the edge and dropping to their death?

Prior to dwelling in cliffs, these farming people had lived in the surrounding valley area, which I discovered had also previously been occupied by those mysterious Hohokam. In fact, it is believed that the Sinagua lifestyle was dramatically altered when they adopted the Hohokam irrigation system.

It was obvious that the prehistoric Hohokam had influenced the Sinagua, the Salado, the Pima and more than likely many other Native American people. Actually, I found myself becoming intrigued by their mysterious existence that was technologically advanced yet simple and spiritual. I wanted to visit other obscure ancient ruins throughout Arizona, to learn more about their lifestyle. But the reality of a plane to catch in Phoenix, baby-sitters to relieve and responsibilities awaiting me, loomed. I knew that my time, like that of the ancient Hohokam, was "all used up."

Trenton, with four individual wrestling champions and 174 1/2 team points, took home the championship trophy of the Plymouth Salem Invitational Wednesday.

The Trojans, who were third last year behind Holt and Salem, had a pair of repeat winners in Mark Straub (160) and Keith Scott (152).

Straub won last year at 152 and Scott at 130. Trenton's other winners were Jason Saineghi (140) and Mike Zack (189).

The tournament was dominated by non-Observerland teams as seventh-place Salem had the best finish of any area school.

Garden City tied with Mount Pleasant for 11th place, but area teams filled five of the last six places in the 22-team field.

Observerland had six wrestlers in the championship finals, producing a pair of winners.

Garden City's Brian Hinzman was a repeat champion at 171 pounds, winning on injury default over Justin Gessner of Monroe Jefferson.

Livonia Churchill's Mike Carter captured the 145-pound title with a 4-2 decision over Belleville's Derrick McCarter in the finals.

Salem heavyweight Charlie Hamblin was the runner-up again, losing in the championship round to the tournament's most valuable wrestler, Brett Faulkner of Novi.

Faulkner won all four of his bouts by pin and spent a total of nine minutes and eight seconds on the mats.

Nearly half of that total (5:50) was registered in the finals as Hamblin was 10 seconds short of going the distance.

Faulkner pinned Garden City's Brad Tinney (0:33), Jefferson's Jon Ferguson (1:10) and Belleville's Calab Hatfield (1:35).

The other area wrestlers in the finals were Livonia Stevenson's Joe Moraga (103), Churchill's Brandon LaPointe (152) and Westland John Glenn's Pete Langer (160).

Also winning titles were Adrian's Dan Duncan (103), Monroe's Ryan Nowitzke (112), Novi's Dan Jilg (119), Brighton's Leif Olson (125), Mount Pleasant's Jason Borrelli (130), Brighton's Pete Bordenkircher (135) and Jefferson's Kurt Kleinon (215). See statistics, C2.

MSU veteran stars in GLI

COLLEGE HOCKEY

As much as Jeff Kozakowski prides himself on playing defense for the Michigan State University hockey team, it's no wonder he went parts of three seasons without scoring a goal.

Kozakowski broke out of his slump in a big way, and at a very opportune time, scoring two goals in the Great Lakes Invitational at the Louis Arena.

The Spartans won their second-straight GLI title with a 3-1 win over the University of Michigan in last Sunday's championship game after beating Northern Michigan University, 5-3, in Saturday's semifinal.

Kozakowski, a senior defenseman and a Garden City High graduate, scored six goals as a freshman and three as a sophomore but none as a junior.

His goal at 6:05 of the second period against NMU tied the score 2-2 and broke a personal 61-game streak without goals. He also scored the first goal in the win over U-M.

His unexpected offense, combined with his usual steady defense, earned him GLI all-tournament honors.

"I'll tell you what, he keeps scoring like that and I'll have to put him in front of the net (on offense)," MSU coach Ron Mason said. "But he does an excellent job defensively. He blocks shots. I don't think I'll take him away from the blue line."

Kozakowski's goals couldn't have been more different.

The one against Northern came when he picked up a loose puck in the slot after an MSU rush and blasted a 25-foot slap shot past the NMU netminder.

"It came to the slot, my eyes got big, I put my head down and buried it," said Kozakowski, nicknamed 'Kozy'.

On the goal against U-M, Kozakowski found an open space, rushed the net, and scored from close range after receiving a pass from teammate Rustyn Dolny with 18:41 left in the first period.

Maybe it was just his turn.

Last year, MSU defenseman Mike Weaver won GLI Most Valuable Player honors, scoring two goals, including the game-winner, along with two assists in the championship game.

Kozakowski, who plays the point on power plays, also has three assists for the Spartans, who are 13-3-2 overall and 7-2-2 in the Central Collegiate Hockey Association.

"Anyone can score these goals, like last year when Weaver was MVP," said Kozakowski, before joking about his role. "There's too much skating involved (playing offense). I think I'll stick to playing defense."

Kozakowski also was on the ice when U-M's Mark Kosick missed a wide-open net after MSU goalie Mike Gresl went behind his net to chase down an errant puck.

Kozakowski provided just enough interference for Kosick's shot to go wide.

Gresl was starting in place of Livonia Churchill graduate Joe Blackburn, who was playing for the U.S. National Junior Team at the World Junior Championships.

"They dumped it in, the puck came off the boards funny and fortunately they didn't score," Kozakowski said.

Kozakowski is not only a leader because he's a senior but because he's the second oldest on the team, turning 24 last Halloween.

He played three years of junior hockey after graduating from high school in 1992, including an all-star season with the Dubuque (Iowa) Fighting Saints of the United States Hockey League in 1994-95.

Kozakowski, who leads all active Spartans with 141 career games played, has a 2.8 grade point average and anticipates graduating in the summer with a communications degree.

He'd like to pursue a career with one of the many professional hockey leagues before stepping into the work

Kozy surroundings: MSU defenseman and Garden City native Jeff Kozakowski scored a pair of goals in the GLI Tourney, won by the Spartans.

world. "I can't believe there's only a half a year left now," Kozakowski said. "I've met a lot of great friends I'll have forever."

Lady Crusaders capture Taylor Tourney crown

Things were looking up Wednesday night for the Madonna University women's basketball team in Upland, Ind.

The Lady Crusaders lifted their overall record to 11-4 by beating host Taylor University in an invitational tournament final, 79-74.

Chris Dietrich led the winners with 25 points, nine rebounds and four assists, while tournament MVP Katie Cushman added 24 points, four assists and three steals.

Both were named to the all-tournament team along with teammate Lori Enfield, who finished with 14 points.

Kathy Paganis also grabbed nine rebounds. Tara Shellabarger and Carrie Fields led Taylor, which led 41-40 at halftime, with 19 and 18 points, respectively. Melissa Simms added 12.

WOMEN'S COLLEGE HOOPS

Shellabarger, Jen Peak (Taylor), Kacy Davidson (Albion College) and Dana Cummings (Ohio Dominican) also made the all-tourney team.

On Tuesday, Madonna jumped out to a 14-2 during the opening four minutes of the game and were never tested the rest of the way in an 84-62 triumph over Ohio Dominican.

The Lady Crusaders shot 37 of 53 from the floor (69.8 percent), missing just eight of 38 two-point attempts. Paganis, nine of 10 from the floor, finished with a game-high 22 points. Cushman contributed 15 points and 10 assists.

Cariasa Gizicki added 13 points and seven rebounds, while Dietrich chipped in with 12 points, six rebounds and three assists.

Julie Mueller paced Dominican with 17 points.

Taylor defeated Albion in the other first-round game, 86-65.

In the consolation final, Albion downed Dominican, 74-70.

The Lady Crusaders open their Wolverine-Hoosier Conference schedule Wednesday, Jan. 6 at home against Aquinas. (Game time is 7 p.m.)

Pilots stop Borgess' tourney run, 72-31

BY STEVE KOWALSKI
STAFF WRITER
skowalski@oe.homecomm.net

Detroit Murray Wright is where former University of Michigan star Robert Traylor attended high school. Picture two players nearly the size of Traylor and you get the idea of what the Pilots had in store for Redford Bishop Borgess on Wednesday night.

Murray Wright, which combines nice guard play with awesome size, spotted Borgess an 8-0 lead and still won 72-31 in the championship game of the Motor City Roundball Classic at U-D Jesuit.

The Pilots' 6-foot-8 senior center Douglas Whittler, who has signed with Youngstown State, and 6-9 senior center Mark Maxwell took turns dominating.

Whittler, who scored a team-high 15 points with seven rebounds and several blocks, was named to the all-tournament team. Maxwell, being recruited by Eastern Michigan and Kent, had eight points and six rebounds.

Their teammate, 6-3 junior forward James Davis, was named tournament Most Valuable Player, largely for what he did in the tournament's first two games in wins over Kettering and Redford.

Davis had four points against Borgess as 10 of the 11 Murray Wright players that saw action scored.

Borgess, whose tallest player is 6-foot-5 sophomore center Marcuz Young, lost for the third time in five games while the Pilots improved to 5-1 overall.

Young, an all-tournament selection, was the only Spartan in double figures with 11 points and eight rebounds. Senior Justin Gleaton had seven points and sophomore Mario Peoples six.

The Spartans scored the game's first eight points and led 10-3 early before the Pilots scored 12 of the next 14 points to lead 15-12 after one quarter.

The Pilots started the second quarter on a 15-2 run and scored the last 11 points of the half to lead 43-18 at the break. The lead grew to 63-28 after three quarters and with 4:38 a running clock was achieved as the lead reached 40 points, summoning the new mercy rule adopted by the Michigan High School Athletic Association.

"They were far more aggressive than us," Borgess coach Roosevelt Barnes said. "After we hit them early, they hit us twice, we backed up and it was over with from there."

Barnes wasn't embarrassed by the margin of defeat.

"A loss is a loss, I don't care if it's by one or 50," he said. "We go from a high yesterday (a 75-73 win over Redford Catholic Central) to a low today. That's basketball. On top one minute, down the next."

Murray Wright coach Earl Moore hopes the tournament championship prepares his players for the wars of the PSL, where perennial state powers Pershing, Cass Tech and Cooley reside, among others.

"If we can keep up the intensity on defense we could have a chance to make a run for it," Moore said. "I watched Borgess play twice and I thought they did a magnificent job defensively."

Traylor, without a job while the NBA endures a players' lockout, sat down at the end of the bench during the game. He's shown up at a few workouts and practices, lending tips to the Pilots' centers.

"He shows them a little something now and then," Moore said. "They haven't proven anything to me yet. I can't put them ahead of anyone yet. If they work hard, down the line maybe I can say that."

• DETROIT REDFORD 57, REDFORD CC 44: Detroit Redford outscored CC 21-5 in the first quarter en route to winning the third-place game, also played Wednesday at U-D Jesuit.

Redford coach Derrick McDowell doesn't know if the win was good or bad for his team's psyche, knowing both teams are likely to meet again in the Class A district. Redford beat CC two years ago when it advanced to the state championship game and the Shamrocks won last year's meeting.

"I asked (CC assistant coach John) Mulroy 'Either you're setting us up for the districts or they didn't seem interested,'" McDowell said. "We shot well from the start and Nick (Moore) seemed a little drained."

Moore, the Shamrocks' star guard who has signed with Toledo, was held to three first-half points and finished with 14. CC junior guard Rob Sparks added 11 points and junior forward Matt Loidas had seven.

Darrell Evans led Redford with 19, including 16 in the second half. Wayne Redmond had 15 and Dewen Foster 12.

Redford, 5-2 overall, led 34-24 at halftime and 45-33 after three quarters. CC fell to 4-2.

• GROSSE ILE 50, ST. AGATHA 44: Grosse Ile jumped to a 13-7 lead after one quarter and held on to beat Redford St. Agatha on Wednesday for third place in the Riverview Gabriel Richard Tournament.

The Aggies fell to 3-2 overall. Grosse Ile, which lost to the host school in overtime in the opening round Monday night, won for the first time in five games.

Junior forward Greg Russell led St. Agatha with 17 points. Senior guard Gelano Miles added 13 points and Maurice Payne, making his first start, had a strong game defensively while scoring two points, according to coach John Fenbert.

Cass Tech turns Wayne inside, outside

BY BRAD EMONS
STAFF WRITER
bemons@oe.homecomm.net

Detroit Cass Tech can beat you both ways — strong guard play and a powerfull inside game.

Wayne Memorial never really solved either in the Superintendent's Tip-Off Classic Wednesday night at Cobo Arena.

Cass, playing its third game in three nights, overcame a sluggish start to down the undermanned Zebras, 58-42.

Last season, guards Javon Clark and Marlon Williamson helped the Technicians reach the state Class A quarterfinals.

The two seniors combined for 30 points against Wayne.

Clark finished with 19, while Williamson added 11.

And now they have a key component in the middle — 6-foot-11, 320-pound junior center Glenn Batemon, who finished with 11.

It was only a night earlier that Batemon faced off against Benton Harbor's much-ballyhooed 6-9 sophomore Robert Whaley in a 50-43 defeat. On Monday, Cass beat Detroit Denby, 60-52.

"With Glenn we have a good low-post presence and he's growing into the position," Cass coach Robert Shannon said. "He played very well against Benton Harbor. We tried a run a play into him that we hadn't run well the first two games."

The win improved Cass Tech's record to 4-2 overall.

"We came out a little lethargic, the guys were a little down from the night before," Shannon said. "But you can't take anything away from Wayne, they're a fine basketball team."

The Zebras (1-3), who have two players injured and four ineligible because of grades, hung with the Technicians for first 10 minutes.

Michael Zielinski's three-pointer with 6:09 left in the half gave Wayne a 17-15 advantage.

Cass, using a full-court zone trap to throw off the Zebras, then reeled off 19 unanswered points during a 4:38 span to grab a 34-17 lead.

"I called a 20-second and a full timeout, but it still didn't help," Wayne coach Chuck Henry said. "We just didn't handle the ball well or have people in the right play."

Five straight points by Wayne's Shane Nowak to end the half cut the deficit to 34-22 at intermission, but the damage had been done.

Clark then scored 10 points to lead a 16-5 Cass run in the third quarter to put the Technicians comfortably ahead going into the final period, 49-26.

"Their perimeter people are very quick, even with the big guy (Batemon) on the floor," Henry said. "And Batemon gives them a strong inside game."

Jamar Davis, who returned sooner than expected after suffering a broken arm (on Dec. 5), returned to the lineup share team-high scoring honors with Nathan Wade (11 points apiece).

"Jamar did that well with just two practices—he had to be a little fatigued," Henry said. "I probably played him more than I wanted him to play."

Holiday break key for Eagles

The Redford Thurston wrestling team has a 2-2 record through the holiday break. Coach Ken Meinschein's team finished 11th of 14 teams at the Gibraltar Carlson Tournament in early December but says it's not a reflection of the team he'll bring to the Observerland Meet, at Livonia Churchill.

Several wrestlers missed the Carlson tourney to take the ACT.

"We are in the middle of a winter break which will determine if we are on the ascendancy, I.E., working harder and getting better or in the unacceptable direction of resting on some internal laurels not yet earned," Meinschein said. "If we learn how to drill over the holidays I like our chances of having a couple of Observerland champions. If these student athletes exhibit the competitiveness shown at last year's Mega Blue Division championship we have a chance to enter the elite in the area."

Preserving rights key agenda in '99

Sportsmen and women across the nation had plenty to celebrate this year in terms of preserving our hunting and fishing heritage.

Although there was no threatening ballot proposal here in Michigan — like the one we faced in 1996 that threatened to limit bear hunting — voters in six other states were faced with ballot proposals centered around hunting, fishing and trapping issues.

The good news is that pro-hunting forces reversed the trend of losses by winning five out of the six issues that went to public vote in 1998.

In Ohio, voters defeated a proposal that would have banned dove hunting in the Buckeye state by a landslide margin of 60 percent to 40 percent.

The Michigan Bear Hunters Association, which took a leading role in this state in the fight to preserve bear hunting at the ballot box in 1996, was a major contributor to the pro-hunting campaign in Ohio. MBHA made a $10,000 donation to the Wildlife Legislative Fund of America, which spearheaded the pro-hunting campaign.

"The animal rights movement affects all of us," said Bloomfield Hills resident Bill Walker, past president and a current director of MBHA. "The loss of hunting privileges in Ohio is a loss to us here in Michigan, too. A loss in Ohio makes us more vulnerable to losing in Michigan."

Voters in Minnesota approved Amendment 2 (77-23 percent), which established hunting and fishing as "a valued part of our heritage that shall be forever preserved for the people and shall be managed by law and regulation for the public good."

OUTDOOR INCIDENTS

BILL PARKER

Alaska voters rejected a proposal (63-37 percent) that would have banned the use of snares for trapping wolves.

Voters in Utah and Wyoming passed measures that will make it tougher for animal rightists to gain passage of future anti-hunting proposals.

In Utah, voters passed a measure (56-44 percent) that established a two-thirds super majority as necessary to pass any future initiative issue to affect wildlife, including proposed hunting, fishing and trapping bans.

Wyoming voters passed a similar measure (62-38 percent) that requires a 15 percent signature tally in two-thirds of the state's counties to qualify any initiative issue for a ballot.

The only loss sportsmen incurred was a measure that outlaws trapping in California (passed 57-43 percent).

The reversal in the trend of losses is encouraging. Sportsmen and sportswomen have taken hits at the ballot box in the past, but we're finally learning to win. We must use these victories as a spring board to meet future anti-hunting attacks head on.

Successful hunters

Every hunter wishes for the opening-day success experienced this fall by David LeFevre. On opening day of the bow season the Livonia hunter tagged an enormous 10-point buck. He returned to the woods for opening day of Michigan's firearms season and bagged another huge 10-point buck.

Nov. 17 turned out to be a pretty good day of hunting for Rochester Hills resident Gary Rogers and his son Eric, of Richmond, Virginia, as each hunter shot a cow elk while hunting in New Mexico.

They returned to Michigan in time to get in a couple of days of whitetail hunting (before Eric had to return to Virginia) and the good fortune continued. On Top three: Plymouth's Tom Lewis arrowed this Hillsdale County buck on the morning of November 7. The 12-point buck is the third biggest non-typical taken in Hillsdale County and has a green score of 161 3/8 inches.

the morning of Saturday, Nov. 21, Eric shot a huge 8-point buck. Later that afternoon, both Gary and Eric were able to fill their doe tags.

"It was a very successful season with five animals harvested in five days," Gary said.

A few weeks ago it was reported here that Tom Lewis, owner of The Town Locksmith in Plymouth, shot a big 12-point buck in Hillsdale County. Update: The buck was Lewis' first buck with a bow and is the third largest non-typical buck taken in Hillsdale County. The green score is a whopping 161 3/8 inches.

New year gives pause for gauging of time

A new year has started according to most civilized societies. How did we know that?

Because the man-made calendar on the wall indicated the transition to another year.

Time has been important to man since Neanderthals had a brain big enough to think of the future with foresight and imagination.

Tools they made were buried with their dead illustrating their belief in the future afterlife.

As man developed language communication he was able to relate events and discuss procedures with other members of the group.

NATURE NOTES

TIM NOWICKI

These discussions often dealt with the concept of time — past, present and the future.

Man living in the temperate regions of the world was very familiar with the seasons, which became a gage of time that dictated movements or activities, like planting and harvesting.

Shorter cycles that were also influential in the development of time intervals were those of the moon and sun.

Ancient people soon associated about 29 cycles of sunrise-sunset to every cycle of new moon to new moon. A moon cycle still influences the timing of events for some cultures.

As man became sedentary and developed a routine, he realized the need for consistency to coordinate the activities of others and the need for a day of rest.

So the lunar cycle was divided into three 10 day periods by ancient Greeks, while Romans used an eight-day week.

The seven-day week was taken from Genesis and has become the most established weekly period in the world today.

Through the years the calendar was refined to coincide with an event or a given number of days.

Egyptians developed a 365-day calendar which was later returned to service by Julius Caesar. But the Egyptians started their year when the star Sirius rose in the east.

The natural phenomena that man used through the years to determine a sequence of events and their return, are the same kind of recurring events that animals use.

Animals don't use the arbitrary calendar on the wall, they use the seasons, the lunar cycle, the rising and setting of the sun, and especially the shortening and lengthening of the daylight period.

They may not have developed the ability to sense the small time units, like minutes and seconds, but they have developed internal mechanisms to accurately time longer events.

Migrating birds can compensate for the movement of the sun from the eastern horizon to the western horizon as they maintain a bearing either south in fall or north in spring.

This also illustrates another interesting point, they know the difference between heading north and heading south and which way to compensate for the sun's movement.

Many other experiments have been conducted to demonstrate their sense of time as we think about our next year on the way to the millennium.

Enjoy another shopping spree at Expo show

TEN-PIN ALLEY

AL HARRISON

The New Year starts with a major bowling show in a much different venue than in past years.

Coming to the Novi Expo Center on Friday through Sunday Jan. 15-17 is the bowling exhibit at the Health, Fitness and Lifestyle Show. For those who have attended other Bowling Expos in past years, this show will be similar but different.

As this year's event will be held in conjunction with the Health, Fitness and Lifestyle show, there will be many exhibitors from those industries in addition to the many bowling exhibitors.

An estimated 15,000 people are expected during the three day run of the show. The show will kick off 3-8 p.m. Friday and continue 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Saturday and 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Sunday.

The Novi Expo Center is located at I-696 and Novi Road in Novi across from Twelve Oaks Center and very easy to get to from anywhere in the metropolitan area. Just look for the water tower.

Among the many exhibitors who will be there are the Hamtramck Singles/Summer Bowling Clinics, Bowlers Aid Pro Shop, Contemporary Awards and Skores Unlimited Pro Shop/Ballistic Bowling Ball Company.

The Hamtramck Singles/Summer Bowling Clinics booth will feature insight into this big money prize tournament and the clinics. Staff members will be on hand to answer any questions, take reservations and secure entries.

The Summer Bowling Clinic program runs at both Hazel Park and Harbor Lanes and is an eight-week program of seminars. It also includes three individual video lessons, a new ball and an open bowling pass.

The program instructors are Mike Lucente, Chris Sand and Kurt Pilon. Stop by this booth to sign up for the tournament or the Summer program to improve your bowling skills.

There will be some excellent buys on bowling equipment of all kinds with special show prices. For those who purchase a ball on the spot, the Bowlers Aid Pro Shop will have a "drilling set up" in their booth and will feature professional fitting and drilling while you wait.

They will also have one of the most complete inventories in the sport on site. Bowlers Aid has been hailed by "Bowling this Month" magazine as "One of the highest volume pro shop operations in the country."

During this show LB.P.S.I. certified technicians will be on hand to diagnose and solve all your bowling related difficulties. Among their show specialties will be ball and bag packages, shoes and wheeled carriers for one, two or more bowling balls and all sorts of other items for you to buy.

A special bonus: The two top ladies touring pros, Aleta Sill and Marianne DiRupo, will be on hand to visit with the fans and autograph pictures. Sill is the all-time leading money winner on the LPBT, and will be the first woman bowler to top $1 million in earnings sometime this year.

There will be representatives on hand from most manufacturers, including Columbia 300, Faball (Hammer), Track, Inc., Storm Products, Ebonite, Dexter Shoes and Turbo 2-N-1 Grips. They will be there to discuss bowling products with the attendees. Stop in and visit their booths.

Contemporary awards will feature collectible sports pictures and corporate awards. Celebrating 25 years in the awards business, Contemporary has two locations in Farmington and Waterford. They will have such celebrity pictures on display as Steve Yzerman, Brian Griese, Kris Draper, Sergei Federov, Gordie Howe, Darren McCarty, Bob Probert and the famed Production Line, all available for purchase.

Skores Unlimited Pro Shop/Ballistic Bowling Ball Company will feature a new "Boomerang" ball, just now reaching the market. Scott Williams will have his full service pro shop on site to attend to all of your immediate bowling needs. A complete line of products will be available for purchase and take home that day.

Show director Mark Martin says, "There will be lots to see and do at this great show."

There will many other exhibitors, including the Greater Detroit Bowling Association, Detroit Women's Bowling Association, Pontiac Women's Bowling Association, Tri-City Women's Bowling Association, Bowling Centers Association of S.E. Michigan, Mid-States Masters, Great Lakes Bowling Centers, Community Bowling Centers, and DiLaura Brothers Bowling Supply.

The regular admission fee is $5 with free parking. It also includes the Health, Fitness and Lifestyle Show. Be sure to mark this event on your calendar for one of the biggest retail bowling shows in the USA and plan to be there and enjoy the show.

Good news from the National Senior Bowling Association. It held its December event at Thunderbird Lanes in Troy and John Wesley of Utica came away with the championship and first place money, rolling a perfect game along the way.

In the first final match he beat Roy Biggs of Canton, 508-464.

Wesley took home $1,100 and the trophy for his efforts. The next NSBA event will be held on Jan. 9th at Super Bowl in Canton. For information of the NSBA or entry forms, call (248) 932-LANE.

Good things come to those who wait.

In this instance, Alvar Freden of Farmington Hills was finally rewarded with a 300 game last Wednesday in the Mayflower Senior Men's Classic League. He is a marvelous bowler at the age of 77 (and a half) and this is his first perfect, after 63 years in the game.

Freden is a retired math teacher from Detroit Cody High and he figured it took him 21,097 games to get the job done. Every shot was right on until the 12th which was a wide Brooklyn that swept the pins away. The game was also 113 pins over his 187 average, and a grand way to end the old year.

The latest action on the Metro Bowling Tour took place Dec. 27th at Airway Lanes in Waterford. In the first stipladder final match, the tournament director Roy Akers had some fun with his game after opening with a gutter ball.

He won the first match, 257-142.

The first woman bowler to make the finals came up next, and Akers fell to Susan Rouse as he missed some crucial spares. 206-188. Rouse could not take advantage when her next opponent, Dan Kurzawski left two open splits and she fell by the wayside, finishing third after losing 205-188.

Todd Baker of Lake Orion was the top seed and final match opposition for Kurzawski, and it was Baker, striking in frames 6 through 11 to post a 246-193 victory and his first MBT title.

Next MBT stop is at Collier Lanes in Oxford, call Roy Akers at (248) 673-7407 for more information.

You may not want it...

...but, we'll bet someone does.

Is your attic or basement or garage filled with stuff you don't want anymore? Maybe you don't have anything quite as weird as our toy Martian, but like most of us, you may have some odds and ends you can do without.

Our 3-2-1—SOLD! offer is just what you need when you have things to sell for under $500.

Here's how it works:

1. You get 3 lines to describe your item (remember, you have to be asking less than $500)
2. You get to run your ad for 2 days (one week)
3. You get 1 low price—just $19.95.

You could say our 3-2-1 plan is as easy as 1-2-3!

Call us today.

Let's Talk Cars

Art Cervi

Happy New Year all you fellow enthusiasts! It's now 1999 and the countdown to the new millennium begins. Yet, while we think of the year 2000, automobile manufacturers are already at work beyond that. They must think years ahead, looking into that crystal ball and deciding what will be our future...and theirs. Guess wrong and it can be a costly mistake for the company...remember the AMC Pacer or the Edsel?
 I am often asked how I see the collectible market twenty-five years from now (25 is the magic number now used to denote a vehicle eligible for antique plates). As I've stated in previous articles, that is a tough call. My head tells me that with the volume of individual cars and trucks being made, tens of thousands, the desirability factor may diminish. I still prefer low production vehicles to collect...again, well optioned. There is a new twist to the hobby and I will stress "hobby" because no one can guarantee what the market may do. At one time, not too long ago, collecting was a small business...cars, furniture, plates, baseball cards, etc. Now people collect "everything" because someone has convinced them they're going to make a fortune. Think of the Furbies this Christmas (people were paying over $100 for a $30 toy), then think about Tickle Me Elmo a few years ago. After the holidays, when the stores replenished their stock, the price comes back to almost normal. What's going to happen when the Beanie Babies craze crashes? Remember, you buy one of millions. Are you positive your children or grandchildren will share your passion? When the stock market was down during the 80's, investors jumped into antique automobiles, buying up the creme de la creme, thereby creating a false market...drove prices crazy. Investment became the buzz word: Folks got caught up in the hype and got burned when the stock market stabilized and the investors dumped out of cars and went back to stocks. Exotics dropped hundreds of thousands, muscle cars tens of thousands. I am so gold that I was not in a buying phase during that time.

 Today, one's interests are becoming more diversified. Young people are concerned about their social security. Projections tell them it will be gone or dramatically lowered. More money is being put into stock investments or IRAs as a cushion for the future. This will adversely affect the collectible market. My advice? Buy something because you like it, enjoy it, don't worry about whether or not you're going to make money when you sell it. The hours you'll spend behind the wheel, taking along the family, the thumbs up you get, all have value, in many cases priceless family time. If and when you decide to sell your vehicle, for whatever reason, check out the current value and price it accordingly, based on the condition of your vehicle. Be fair, be realistic. If it's more than you paid originally, good for you...if it's less, recall all your memories. I believe you'll find you're still a winner. Till next week...

The 1999 F150. Talk About Agressive.

By Anne Fracassa
Avanti! News
Features

I thought the redesign of the Ford F150 a few year back made it so much more masculine — in the Tim Allen sense — and much, more attractive than the boxy model it replaced.

Take a gander at the 1999 F150 now. Talk about aggressive. Talk about meatier. Talk about sportier. It's a powerful statement for the truck crowd.

You have to understand, here. I didn't drive the bare-boned, basic "here-you-go" work-truck-type F150.

I drove the 4x4 Flareside supercab Lariat edition F150 with all the trimmings and a bit of cranberry sauce on the side. Sorry — still thinking about the holidays and all that scrumptious food.

Anyway, with this much comfort and convenience features thrown into a truck that topped-out at about $33,000, you can see why I would be a tad impressed by this substantially powerful vehicle.

Let's talk about the power first. Standard on a normal F150 is a 4.2-liter V6 split-port-induction engine mated to a 5-speed manual overdrive transmission that will net you about 205 horses. Sounds reasonable.

Now pop the optional (of course) 5.4-liter Triton V8 engine under the hood and you'll see what I'm talking about. You fire this engine up and you know it's ready to rock and roll. As Scotty would say: There "beez" power under this "hair" hood, cap'n, and she stands ready at your command.

OK, Commander Scott. Let's see what she's got.

The versatility in the Ford F-150 is more than any truck owner would want to have.

With torque that's better than any other V8-powered half-ton pickup on the market, the Triton V8 outputs a respectable 260 horsepower. Not that IT'S respectable, mind you. I'm suggesting that YOU better respect it.

I mean, this is no 300 horsepower diesel. Here. But you know what? It's got all the power anyone needs in any given situation in normal, everyday driving. Whether you use this handsome truck for the construction site or to take your children to hockey practice, you'll feel at home. The versatility in this truck is more than any truck owner would want to have.

Let's step inside for a minute. Did I mention it has four doors? Yep. All four doors swing open wide to let adult-sized passengers in with ease. Got a month's worth of groceries? No prob. It'll easily fit back in the extended cab area with room to drive down to the local lumber yard for a few supplies.

The fourth door is standard this year, by the way. As it should be.

The door trim panels have been changed and look cleaner this year. Leather seating is very comfortable. Instrumentation is centered around the driver and all controls are easy to use and operate. There are two power points up front to provide power to the cell phone and any other gizmos you travel with.

Between the driver and front passenger is a large console/armrest that can provide storage for anything from a cell phone to CDs and cassettes. The top of the console has two places for a cup/can for a beverage and the top can double as a writing surface in a pinch.

One thing that amazes me about construction/repair/workman-owned trucks is that the top instrumentation panel seems to be the most important place to put everything from the morning paper to paperwork for the next job. No one will be disappointed in the front dash. Lots of room to jam whatever you need to jam up there.

Don't count on the glove compartment, though. There's just enough room for the owner's manual and warranties. But it's questionable whether you can jam your registration and certificate of insurance in there, it's so tight.

If you're really a pack rat, you'll be happy to know that under the seats — both up front and in back — there isn't a ton of electronic gadgetry, so you can jam some more paperwork under there, if you need to.

I stuck my laptop under the rear of the extended cab seats to hide it and nobody was the wiser. That's because the rear seats are full bench seats without the dumb supports underneath. Rather have the extra room, actually.

I don't think I have to mention that the 4x4 models are shift-on-the-fly or that cab steps are standard this year, but I will. The anti-theft system is also standard this year on all models.

Also new this year is an optional factory-installed tonneau cover — a first for Ford. The tonneau cover is snap-free and installs in a matter of seconds. The most prominent benefit is fuel economy, of course, but the cover always adds a finished, classy look to a truck.

I have to mention the comfort level of this truck is outstanding. Although you are way up high, like a truck should be, you aren't bouncing all over the road. You're planted firmly on the ground and there's comfort and control feedback from everything from the seating surfaces to the steering wheel.

The F150 is a good choice when looking at a work truck or an all-around family truck. A bit on the pricey side, but then again, what isn't?
